The foxing, or discoloration with age, characteristic of old books, sometimes shows through to some extent in reprints such as this, especially when the foxing is very severe in the original books. We feel that the contents of this book warrant its reissue despite these blemishes, and hope you will agree and read it with pleasure. Due to space limitation, two fold-out maps appearing in the original edition have been removed. Additionally, please note that the text begins on p.9; this is the intention of the publisher and not a production error.

SCALE, TWO INCHES TO THE MILE.

HISTORY OF LUCAS COUNTY, OHIO.

LUCAS COUNTY, OHIO, is situated in the northwestern portion of the state, adjoining the State of Michigan, and having a coast line of about twenty miles upon Lake Erie. The latitude of Toledo is very nearly 41 degrees, 40 minutes, north, and its longitude six degrees west from Washington. The county contains, by careful estimate, about three hundred and fifty square miles, not including the area of Maumee Bay, containing about twenty square miles. It is divided into twelve (12) civil townships, exclusive of the City of Toledo, which contains very nearly the equivalent of a congressional township within the new limits, or about twenty-two thousand (22,000) acres. It is of very irregular form, being thirty-six (36) miles in extreme length along the "Fulton Line," and varying, from a point at the eastern extremity of Oregon Township, to a breadth of twenty-one (21) miles along the west line.

The Maumee, or "River a la Roche" of the French, forms the boundary between Lucas and Wood Counties down to the southwestern border of Toledo, from whence the "Fulton Line" is the boundary eastward to Lake Erie. The other principal streams are the Ottawa River and Swan Creek, with their branches. The whole northwestern portion of the state, from Lake Erie westward to the Indiana line, was, for a long time, called Wood County with its commercial and civil capital at "Fort Meigs" which included the Towns of Perrysburg and Maumee City, and a large extent of surrounding country. The County of Lucas was organized, with its present limits, during the exciting days of the Ohio and Michigan "border war" 1833–6. The county was originally heavily timbered, with the exception of a tract of sandy barrens extending from the Michigan line, in Sylvania Township, southwesterly, and including portions of Sylvania, Springfield, Spencer, Monclova and Swanton Townships.

A broad strip of country, extending from Lake Erie westward to the Indiana line and northward to the Michigan line, was long known to the armies of Harmer, St. Clair, Wayne and Harrison, and to hunters, trappers, missionaries, traders and the early settlers generally, as the "Black Swamp."

This once forbidding and almost impassable wilderness has been made literally to "blossom as the rose," and the time is not far distant when it will be the wealthiest agricultural region of the state. The country is generally a level plain, elevated from twenty to sixty feet above the level of Lake Erie, and having a deep, rich clay or sandy loam soil, producing in great abundance corn, wheat and all the cereals, and well adapted also to the production of apples, pears, peaches, grapes and all the fruits of the temperate zone.

Building stone is found along the Maumee River and in various other places, and good brick clay is inexhaustible. The Maumee River and the Wabash and Erie Canal afford considerable water-power, and there are also mill-sites upon several of the smaller streams, at Sylvania, and other localities.

Undoubtedly the earliest settlement made by Europeans was on the site of the old Fort Miami, at the bend of the river below the big island, in the Miami Suburb of Maumee City, by the Chevalier La Salle, in the Autumn of 1680, about twenty years before the founding of Detroit. La Salle is said to have erected a stockade and wintered at this point during his memorable explorations of the western lakes and rivers. On the same spot the British built a strong earth-work fortress, with heavy bastions, blockhouses and stockade early in the season of 1794, although the location was fifty (50) miles within the acknowledged limits of the United States. Soon after General Wayne's total defeat of the Confederate Indians at the Rapids of the Maumee, called sometimes the "Battle of the Fallen Timbers," August 20, 1794, the British evacuated the post; but we find them again in possession in the Spring of 1813.

In 1695, Captain Nicholas Perrot built a trading station at the west end of Lake Erie, which was occupied for two years. The first English traders began to visit the Maumee Country about 1698-1699. We find the French Governor of Detroit, M. De Longueuil, complaining, at a grand council which he held with the Indians, in 1700, of the encroachments of the English.

In 1707, M. de Cadillac, commanding at Detroit, which place he founded in 1700, marched a force against the Miami Indians, and compelled them to sue for peace. In 1709, he advocated the building of a ship canal from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario. In 1725, the French Governor of Canada, Baron De Longueuil, reported that the English had built two trading houses on a stream flowing into the Wabash, where they traded with the Miamis and other tribes. About 1739 De Longueuil constructed a wagon road from Detroit to the Ohio River, which crossed the Maumee at the foot of the rapids. This road has been used at various times, from that date to this, by the federal armies, by Indians and traders, by British and French, and is now a great turnpike.

In 1745, Nicholas, a celebrated Huron Chief, who had his principal village at what is now Sandusky on the Bay, arranged a great conspiracy among several tribes to massacre all the French in the West and seize their posts and goods. The plan was frustrated through information furnished a Jesuit priest by a squaw, and the whole scheme broken up by the vigilance of the French commander.

The allied Indians deserted Nicholas, and in 1748 he destroyed his villages on Sandusky Bay and, with a remnant of his own tribe, removed to the Ohio River near the Illinois line, where he died the same year.

Immediately after the removal of Nicholas, the French rebuilt and garrisoned Fort Miami under the command of Captain Dubuisson.

In 1756 France and England declared war, which terminated in 1760, in the surrender of all the French possessions in America to the English. In 1763, the great chieftain, Pontiac, perhaps the most powerful that ever gave battle to the English, united all the western and many of the southern tribes in a general plan to exterminate the whites.

Nine prominent English forts, including Mackinac, Miami and Sandusky were captured, by treachery, or assault, and most of their garrisons massacred. The war extended beyond the Alleghenies, and twenty thousand (20,000) people were driven from their homes in Western Virginia.

Detroit, under command of Major Gladwyn, a very competent officer, came very near being taken by treachery, and was only saved through information furnished by a squaw, who had been making moccasins for the Major, who divulged the whole plan, and the chief was frustrated in his design; but he immediately laid siege to the place, and maintained it vigorously for eleven months, until March, 1764, when General Bradstreet arrived and settled the difficulties by a general treaty of peace, ratified at Detroit in August following. Pontiac was so chagrined at the failure of his plans that he left his own nation and wandered away to the Illinois and other tribes, endeavoring, but in vain, to instigate a new war.

He was afterwards killed by a Kaskaskia or Peoria Indian. From 1764 to 1790 the Maumee region was occupied by various tribes of Indians, sometimes peaceful and sometimes at war among themselves, at other times with the whites.

English trading posts were established in various parts of the country, but the French half-breeds monopolized the business of interpreters, and thus, singular as it may seem, although the English were nominally in possession of the country, yet they were dependent almost entirely upon their conquered subjects for mediums through which to transact business with the natives.

The celebrated Girty brothers, Thomas, Simon, George and James, so long identified with the Indians in the west, were well known among the settlers of the Maumee valley. Simon was killed at the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813.

By the terms of the Treaty of 1783, between Great Britain and the United States, the former were to "evacuate with all convenient speed," all the posts held by them within the United States territory, but they continued to hold many points for several years, and, to their everlasting dishonor, continually stirred the Indians up to war with the Americans, and furnished them with arms and protection, until the war of 1812-15 forced them to confine themselves to their own territory, and to respect the young Republic. In 1789 Washington appointed General Josiah Harmer to the command of the military forces designed for the defense of the Northwest.

December 29, 1789, the General arrived at Cincinnati at the head of a force of three hundred and twenty regular troops, and about eleven hundred militia. Harmer had seen service as a colonel during the Revolution. From that date to September 30, 1790, he was busy making preparations and collecting material for an expedition against the Northern Indians.

On that day his army moved out and pushed northward toward the Indian towns clustered about the locality where Fort Wayne now stands, known as the "Miami Villages." October 14, the advance under Colonel Hardin reached the Indian Towns, and found them deserted and the principal one destroyed.

It is said the Indians had seven (7) villages clustering about the junction of the St. Joseph and St. Mary's Rivers. The army burned all the villages and destroyed about twenty thousand (20,000) bushels of corn, and also a large amount of property belonging to French traders, who were there in considerable force. On the 18th a force of two hundred men were surprised and cut to pieces by the Indians after a most desperate engagement.

On the 21st the army left on their return, but General Harmer, learning that the Indians had reoccupied the burned villages, resolved to try and balance the losses of the 18th by a rapid attack upon the savages. He accordingly detached Colonel Hardin with three hundred militia and sixty regulars to accomplish the work.

This force was divided to make sure work, but the savages rallied in great numbers and defeated it with terrible loss, including several of the best officers.

The celebrated Chief, "Little Turtle" commanded the Indians in both battles.

After getting his command nearly destroyed by fighting in detachments, Harmer retreated to Fort Washington, where he was soon after superseded in command by General Arthur St. Clair, who was in turn more disastrously defeated than his predecessor. Harmer died in 1803, near Philadelphia, Penn.

General St. Clair advanced with his army, stated at twenty-three hundred men, September 17, 1791. After building Forts Hamilton and Jefferson he finally arrived, November 3, at the head-waters of the Wabash, in what is now the southwestern part of Mercer County, Ohio. Here, on the morning of the fourth, at sunrise, while the army was breaking up from parade, he was attacked by Little Turtle at the head of a large Indian force, and totally defeated, after one of the most terrible conflicts ever fought between the Indians and the whites. The total loss of the American army amounted to between nine (900) and ten hundred (1,000), of whom over six hundred (600), were killed on the field, including many valuable officers. The army retreated in confusion, leaving its wounded and dead, and all the artillery and baggage a prey to the enemy. In 1792, General Anthony Wayne was appointed to the command of the Northeastern army, and from this time forward success was assured.

In October, 1793, Wayne established his headquarters at a point now known as Greenville, in Darke County, where he built a strong fort and passed the winter months. During the Winter the field of St. Clair's defeat was occupied, the dead buried, and a stockade erected and named "Fort Recovery."

Wayne completed his preparations for a decisive campaign against the Indians in the early Summer of 1794, and on the 28th of July put his army in motion against the enemy. He left no means untried to make peace with the Indians, but without success, and on the 18th of August his army reached a point called by the French "Roche de Boute" near the present site of Waterville, where they threw up light works for storing baggage, and named it Fort Deposit. On the twentieth the army moved forward to attack the enemy who were encamped at and around the "fallen timbers" and "Presque Isle Hill," two miles south of Maumee City, and four miles from the British "Fort Miami," or "Fort Campbell;" which had been reoccupied by them the Spring before.

The strength of Wayne's army was about three thousand (3,000) men. Advancing rapidly, he routed the savages at the point of the bayonet, giving them no chance to rally, and drove them in confusion and with great slaughter under the guns of the British fort, whose commander, Major William Campbell, although in sympathy with the Indians, dared not open his gates, or fire a gun in their behalf.

It is due to the memory of "Little Turtle" to state that he was in favor of making peace with Wayne, and warned the Indians that they had better not fight him.

Some sharp correspondence between Wayne and Major Campbell followed, relative to the occupation of the fort, in which Wayne demanded the immediate withdrawal of the British forces from American soil; but no collision occurred between them.

To counteract the influence of Fort Miami, Wayne built a fort at the mouth of Swan Creek and named it "Fort Industry." It stood at the corner of Summit and Monroe Streets, where Fort Industry Block now stands in Toledo. Many evidences of battle have been since found on the ground, where the busiest portion of Toledo is built.

On the 27th of August following, the army took up their line of march towards the head of the Maumee. Halting at Fort Defiance and strengthening that work, they arrived at the Maumee Villages September 14, and began the work so long contemplated. On the 22d of October the fort was completed, and named Fort Wayne in honor of the gallant and successful commander of the army.

Lieutenant Colonel Hamtramck was placed in command. On the 28th of October, General Wayne, with the main body of the regular troops, started on his return for Fort Greenville, where, in the following year, he concluded a great treaty with the defeated and demoralized Indians. He died during the latter part of the year 1795, and was buried at "Presque Isle," now Erie, Pennsylvania.

Many years after his remains were removed by his son to the place of his nativity. The famous scouts, Captain William Wells, and Captain Ephraim Kibby, commanding, or leading, each a band of thorough woodsmen and Indian fighters, were attached to Wayne's army, and contributed not a little to its success. Lieutenant Wm. H. Harrison, then a young man, was an aid on the General's staff and was wounded in the battle.

Perhaps he little deemed he should, a few years later, govern all this vast territory, and lead another army to greater victories on this very ground.

From the date of the terrible defeat of the Indians by Wayne until the year 1811, the savages remained tolerably quiet. In that year the great Shawanese Chief, Tecumseh, attempted to unite all the Indian tribes in a grand coalition against the whites. This famous chief was one of three children at a birth. One was the great "Prophet" so signally defeated by Harrison at the "Tippecanoe" ground, November 7, 1811. The third never appeared in history. At the time of the battle of Tippecanoe Tecumseh was absent at the south stirring up the Indians in that region with his grand scheme of warfare.

He enjoined his brother, the Prophet, on no account to fight Harrison in his absence, but, the Prophet, thinking he had a fine opportunity to cut Harrison to pieces, attempted it, and was overthrown.

The battle probably prevented a dangerous coalition of the savages.

On the 18th of June, 1812, Congress declared war against Great Britain, and once more the merciless Indian warfare commenced in the west. On the 16th of August the imbecile General William Hull surrendered the post of Detroit and his entire army to General Brock, Commanding the British forces in the Western Province of Canada.

Mackinac was surprised and taken on the 17th of July, and the garrison at Fort Dearborn, where Chicago now stands, were massacred on the 15th of August, and thus, almost at a blow, all the government posts in the northwest except Fort Wayne and Fort Harrison were in the hands of the enemy.

Both the latter posts were attacked, but were admirably defended, the first, by Captain Rhea, and the latter by Major Zachary Taylor, who afterwards won distinguished honors in the Mexican war, and was elected President of the United States in 1848.

On the 17th of September, 1812, General Harrison was appointed to the chief command of the army of the Northwest. At the time of his appointment he was Governor of the Northwest Territory.

General J. Winchester, who commanded a division under Harrison, arrived at the Rapids of the Maumee on the 10th of January, 1813. On the 17th, at the earnest request of the people of the Village of Frenchtown on the River Raisin, he detached Colonels Lewis and Allen with six hundred and sixty (660) men to their relief. This detachment marched on the ice to Frenchtown, which they found occupied by the British, but after a sharp conflict, routed them and took possession. On the 19th General Winchester followed with two hundred and fifty (250) additional troops and joined the first detachment.

Neglecting to throw up entrenchments, the whole force was surprised and captured after a short defense, by a strong force of British and Indians, under General Proctor, on the morning of the 22d of January.

A bloody massacre of the Americans by the Indians followed this surrender, which forever brands with damning infamy the name of Proctor. Of the whole force of eight hundred (800) men, one-third were killed in the battle and about one-third perished in the massacre. Only thirty-three (33) escaped to the American lines.

Learning of Winchester's advance, Harrison had hurried up reinforcements to his assistance, but they arrived only in season to meet the few survivors on their retreat.

Finding himself terribly weakened, and in no condition to resist a strong force, Harrison destroyed the stockade at the rapids and retreated to Portage River, eighteen (18) miles in the rear. On the first of February, having been joined by re-enforcements, and finding his army seventeen hundred (1,700) strong, Harrison again advanced to the Maumee Rapids, and commenced the erection of the fort so famous in the history of the Northwest, which he named "FORT MEIGS," in honor of the Governor of Ohio.

This work stood nearly opposite Maumee City, and about three-quarters (¾) of a mile above the site of Perrysburg, on a commanding bluff, some sixty (60) feet above the river and on the right bank. It was more strictly an entrenched camp than a fort, and covered about ten acres of ground. It was of an irregular, oval form, with bastions along the river front and at the east end, and several block-houses along the south or rear wall, all connected by a strong parapet, with ditch in front.

As early as 1807 there was quite a settlement at the Maumee Rapids, consisting of American and French traders. Among the names we find three families of Ewings, Carlin, Race, Carter and Hull, Americans; and of the French those of Beaugrand, La Point, Momeny and Peltier. A French settlement was also made at the mouth of the river, opposite Manhattan, in 1806 or 1808. Among the settlers were Peter Navarre, a grandson of Robert de Navarre, who came to this country in 1745. There was also an Ottawa Village at the mouth of the river, ruled by a descendant of Pontiac. It is also said that the widow of Pontiac, Kan-tuck-ee-gun, and her son Otussa, dwelt in the village. The Ottawas, then living upon the Lower Maumee, numbered about eight thousand. Intelligence of the declaration of war was conveyed to the people of of the Maumee Valley by Peter Manor, of Providence. Peter Navarre joined Hull's army, went to Detroit, and afterwards returned to Raisin, and enlisted in Colonel Anderson's regiment. He was included in Hull's surrender, but liberated, with his four brothers, on parole.

The first information of the surrender of Hull, says Peter Manor, was given to the inhabitants at the foot of the rapids, by a band of sixty or seventy Delaware Indians, who arrived in advance of the main army on their march toward Fort Wayne.

Manor and some of his neighbors were standing in front of Beaugrand's store in Maumee when the Indians came out of the woods. Drawing up in line they brought their guns to their faces and were about to fire, when Beaugrand waved a white handkerchief and they dropped their muskets. An hour later about one hundred British soldiers and as many Wyandots and Potowattamies came up. The British commander inquired for guides, and notwithstanding Manor pretended to be very much disabled by lameness, pressed him into the service. He guided them to the head of the rapids, where they dismissed him. On his way home he was met by Colonel Elliott, in command of the whole British force, who examined him very closely, and finally permitted him to proceed. He returned to Beaugrand's, and finding the country too warm for him, he started to join his family at the mouth of the river, but was captured at the mouth of Swan Creek by the officer in command of two British vessels lying there. He was put in confinement until Beaugrand interposed in his behalf, and persuaded the British officer to release him. He and his four brothers, and Joseph Bordeau rendered essential service to the United States during the war. They were employed as scouts by General Harrison as soon as Fort Meigs was completed. When the enemy first made their appearance opposite the fort, Navarre discovered the Indians crossing the river at the foot of the "Big Island" and reported to Harrison, who immediately dispatched him with three letters — one for Lower Sandusky, one for Upper Sandusky and one to Governor Meigs, at Urbana. At the close of the fifth day he handed the letter to the Governor.

Navarre was born at Detroit in 1786. He was in the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813, and witnessed the death of Tecumseh.

General Proctor offered a reward of one thousand dollars for Navarre's head, but the Indians said his perfect knowledge of woodcraft made it impossible to capture him.

They advised the general to capture him himself. Navarre received a pension of eight dollars a month from the government. In the latter part of April, 1813, the British and Indians appeared in large force around Fort Meigs, then held by Harrison with about eleven hundred effective men. The Indians surrounded the works, from the river above to the river below, and Proctor busied himself in bringing up his guns and mortars and erecting batteries. His principal battery was located on a narrow ridge between a ravine and the river, and near the point of intersection of Erie and Canal Streets, in Maumee City. The shells from the fort which passed over the battery exploded harmlessly in the ravine in rear of the guns. The position was admirable. He also erected another battery on a commanding eminence on the south side of the river, and east of the fort, for the purpose of enfilading the works. But Harrison, always vigilant, anticipated these movements and counteracted them by throwing up an immense line of earth, called the "Grand Traverse," and extending the entire length of the works, three hundred yards, and also constructed other short traverses at right angles with the main one. The "Grand Traverse" was twenty feet thick at the base and twelve feet high. It still rises from three to seven feet above the general level of the ground. The British vessels laid below where the mouth of the canal now is, where the high bluff protected them from the fire of Harrison's guns. The surrounding forest, the hill sides and ravines were alive with Indians, The main portion of the British army were at Fort Miami or Fort Campbell, two miles below.

The total British and Indian forces under Proctor and Tecumseh was estimated at thirty-two hundred, — six hundred British Regulars, eight hundred Canadian Militia and eighteen hundred Indians.

On the first of May, the British batteries opened a heavy fire upon the fort and kept it up without intermission for three days. On the third a gun and mortar battery was established still nearer the American line, and the Indians from the tops of the trees were annoying the garrison greatly. At this juncture, Proctor summoned Harrison to surrender. To this summons Harrison replied that "the fort would not be surrendered upon any terms, and that if General Proctor captured it, it would be under circumstances which would do him more honor than a thousand surrenders."

It is said that when Proctor discovered the "Grand Traverse" through his glass, he remarked that there was little hope of capturing the fort, for men who could accomplish such a herculean task in so short a time would not be likely to surrender.

The requisitions of Harrison upon the Governors of Ohio and Kentucky had been promptly answered, and already General Green Clay was descending the Maumee with twelve hundred Kentuckians, in flat-boats for his relief. Captain William Oliver arrived at the fort on the night of the fourth, at twelve o'clock, and brought the welcome intelligence of General Clay's approach, stating that he could reach the fort in two hours. The arrival of this force was probably unknown to the enemy, for they were taken completely by surprise.

General Harrison determined at once to become the attacking party, and accordingly sent word to General Clay to land eight hundred men upon the left bank, carry the batteries by assault, spike the guns, and retire under the river bank, covered by the guns of Fort Meigs.

The balance of Clay's force was to land on the right bank, fight their way to the fort, and in connection with a sallying party from the fort, capture the batteries below.

To Colonel Dudley was assigned the task of capturing the batteries upon the left bank, and most gallantly was the work accomplished. The first intimation the British had of Dudley's presence, was the tremendous shout of the Kentuckians as they swept down upon the batteries with the bayonet. The guns were spiked, and the enemy either killed, captured, or driven down the river. But here the troops committed a terrible blunder, common to undisciplined soldiers: Instead of falling back under the protection of Fort Meigs, according to Harrison's orders, they swore vengeance on the Indians for the massacre at Frenchtown, and pursued them into the dense forest to the north of where Maumee City stands, perhaps a mile or more, where they fell into an Indian ambush, and were nearly all killed or captured. In the mean time, the British advanced rapidly from Fort Miami, intercepting their retreat and the destruction of Dudley's army was complete.

Colonel Dudley was killed, and after the surrender a massacre began, which only the presence of Tecumseh prevented from being consummated by the death of all the prisoners.

A sortie was made from the upper end of the fort in aid of the balance of General Clay's command, who, after being knocked about on the rapids, were endeavoring to reach the fort. The move was entirely successful, the Canadians and Indians were defeated, and the troops reached the fort. Another sortie was made, from the eastern angle of the works, upon the British batteries on the right bank. The troops were commanded by Colonel John Miller of the 19th United States Regiment, and consisted of about two hundred and fifty men of the 17th and 19th Regiments, one hundred twelve-months' volunteers, and Captain Scobre's company of Kentucky Militia. The force was drawn up in the ravine, under the east curtain of the fort, out of range of the enemy's fire.

The batteries were supported by one company of grenadiers, one of light infantry, about two hundred strong, and by two or three companies of Canadians, and a large force of Indians, said to have been under the immediate command of Tecumseh, though this is extremely doubtful, as he was probably on the left bank of the river.

Harrison passed along the line and encouraged the men to do their duty, and as the gallant men moved forward, he placed himself upon the bastion of the eastern angle to witness the assult. The troops advanced at the double quick, with loaded arms at a trail. As they broke over the bluff, the British infantry opened on them, but, firing their pieces "breast high," as was the custom of their army, the shot passed harmlessly over the Americans. The fire of the Indians, on the contrary, was close and severe. In crossing the plateau, a distance of two hundred yards, the line halted once, under a withering fire, and dressed ranks as coolly as if on parade, and then, with a rapid charge, they routed the entire force, captured the batteries and spiked the guns. Forty-five of the British were captured in this affair, which was most gallantly conducted, and the enemy driven from all his positions.

Seeing no hope of reducing the works, and finding his Indian allies getting discontented and disbanding, Proctor, on the ninth of May, raised the siege and returned precipitately to Fort Malden.

On the right bank, during the siege and in the several sorties of the fifth, the American loss was eighty-one killed and one hundred and eighty-one wounded. The losses on the left bank, mostly sustained at Dudley's defeat, were much greater, amounting to about eight hundred men; but the British were not able to take any advantage of their temporary success. And thus ended one of the most remarkable campaigns in the history of the Northwest—a campaign beginning in reverses and attended with great losses, yet terminating with honor to the American arms.

The losses of the British and Indians was not known, but must have been quite heavy.

After the abandonment of the siege by Proctor, Harrison repaired the damaged fort, putting it in good condition, and left for the interior of the state to organize the new levies.

On the 20th of July, following, the boats of the enemy were again discovered approaching Fort Meigs, and the following day a party of ten men were surprised by Indians and only three escaped. Proctor and Tecumseh this time brought a force of five thousand men, including the largest Indian force ever assembled during the war. General Green Clay was in command of the fort with a garrison of a few hundred men, and immediately dispatched Captain McCune of the Ohio Militia to apprise Harrison of the return of the enemy.

Harrison was at Lower Sandusky, and sent Captain McCune back with orders to General Clay to be very cautious against surprise, and he should be relieved as soon as possible. The Captain was sent out a second time with intelligence to Harrison that a body of eight hundred Indians had passed the fort, going up the Maumee, apparently to attack Fort Winchester, at Defiance. But the General believed it only a ruse, and that the design was to attack Upper and Lower Sandusky, or Cleveland.

On the 25th the Captain was again sent back to the fort to inform General Clay of Harrison's situation and designs. Accompanied by James Doolan, a French Canadian, he started on his return, and succeeded, after a hair-breadth escape from the Indians, in getting into the fort, with intelligence which probably saved it from capture by strategem.

Tecumseh had arranged a plan to deceive the garrison with a sham battle, and coax them out to the relief of reinforcements which were supposed to be approaching The British force was concealed in a ravine below the fort, ready, at the right moment, to carry it by a sudden onslaught, while Tecumseh's Indians proceeded to open a fire of small arms, even imitating the regular volleys of disciplined infantry, and making the garrison believe that their expected reinforcements were close at hand, and fighting a desperate battle for their relief.

The garrison flew to arms, and begged to be led to the assistance of their friends. But General Clay, though unable to account for the firing, was too wary to expose himself, and a rain commencing to fall soon put an end to Tecumseh's scheme, and the garrison was saved.

On the 28th, failing to get any advantage of the garrison, Proctor and Tecumseh embarked their stores and proceeded down the river.

The rectangular work near the western angle of Fort Meigs, was built between the two sieges to accommodate a smaller garrison. In was about one hundred feet square, with bastions at the angles.

A volunteer aid of General Clay made the statement afterwards, that arrangements were made for firing the magazine, in case the enemy succeeded in taking the works, and thus blowing them all up together.

In the meanwhile the gallant Commodore Perry was busily engaged in building a fleet at Erie, with which to drive the British, under Commodore Barclay, from the lake, or capture them. Barclay proposed to destroy these vessels before they were launched, but the depth of water on the bar prevented his accomplishing his design. Perry's fleet, when complete, was ingeniously lightered over the bar and got ready for the memorable battle which followed, and decided the sovereignty of the lakes.

On the 31st of July, Proctor appeared in the vicinity of Lower Sandusky, where was a small, light fortification, mounting one six-pounder gun, and garrisoned by a force of one hundred and fifty men under Major Croghan, a young man of twenty-one years. This was called Fort Stephenson.

The principal stores of Harrison were at Upper Sandusky—Harrison himself was at Seneca.

A council of war deeming Fort Stephenson untenable against a heavy force and siege guns, which Proctor could easily bring against it, Croghan was instructed to blow up the works and join Harrison, but before this could be accomplished the enemy appeared. The gallant defense of the fort is well known to every reader of American history. A furious assault by Colonel Short at the head of a picked body of troops, was terribly repulsed, and the colonel killed in the ditch while waving his sword and calling his men to come on and give the d——d Yankees no quarter. The loss of the enemy was about one hundred and fifty killed and wounded. The gallant Croghan was promoted, and also presented with an elegant sword by the ladies of Chillicothe. This signal repulse occurred on the 1st of August, 1813. Nothing of importance after this occurred until the celebrated battle of Lake Erie, in which

Perry, after a severe contest, captured the British fleet. At the time of the naval battle on Lake Erie the British and Indians, under Proctor and Tecumseh, to the number of forty-five hundred, were encamped at Fort Malden awaiting the issue. When the result was known, Proctor destroyed the works and commenced a rapid retreat, via Sandwich and the valley of the Thames, into the interior.

On the 27th of September, Harrison crossed the river at Malden with his whole force. On the 29th he was at Sandwich, where Colonel Johnson's mounted Kentucky regiment joined him. On the same day Detroit was occupied by the American troops.

October 2nd, Harrison began a vigorous pursuit of Proctor, whom he overtook on the 5th. Posted in a strong position, with his left resting upon the River Thames and his right upon a marsh, Proctor awaited battle. The British, drawn up in two lines, were charged and completely broken by the mounted Kentuckians of Harrison's army and immediately surrendered; but the formidable force of Indians under Tecumseh on the left fought obstinately, until the death of their chief destroyed their hopes, when they broke and fled in confusion. This battle practically ended the war in the Northwest.

Tecumseh was undoubtedly a magnificent specimen of the Indian race. According to General Hunt's recollection of him, and he knew him well, he was about five feet ten inches in height, heavily built, and weighed about one hundred and eighty pounds. His appearance was noble and commanding, and all accounts agree that he was humane and generous to his prisoners, and many times saved them from the fury of his warriors.

He was of mixed blood, his father having been a Shawanese, and his mother a Cherokee.

Pontiac, Little Turtle, and Tecumseh were the three most remarkable and able warriors and statesmen among the tribes of the west. The signification of Tecumseh in the Indian tongue was Shooting star. At the time of his death he held a commission as brigadier general in the British army, and was about forty-five years of age. After the war a large number of reservations were made to Indians, half-breeds, and French traders and settlers. Many of them remain. They were generally laid out at right-right angles to the lakes and streams; without regard to the regular surveys by sections, and consequently, cut the country into very irregular shapes, particularly in the vicinity of Maumee City.

Ohio was admitted into the Union in 1802. At that time the geography of the West was very imperfectly known. The best map then in existence was one published by Mitchel and Bradley in 1780. This map represented the southern extremity of Lake Michigan some thirty miles farther north than it really was. It also showed the entire line of the Mississippi many miles too far east, and the mouths of the Great and Little Miami Rivers very much out of the way, and even showed the southern coast of Lake Erie ten miles too far south.

The celebrated Ordinance of 1787, defining the boundaries of the Northwest Territory, evidently took this map as a guide. This territory included all the region bounded by the Ohio River and the Pennsylvania line on the east and south, by the Mississippi River and the British Dominions on the west and north, and now comprising the flourishing States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, comprising an area of about two hundred and fifty thousand (250,000) square miles, and containing at this date, (1874) over ten million people!

The "Ordinance of 1787" divided this great territory into three parts. The dividing lines being the east and west lines of the State of Indiana, and extending north to the British Dominions. A provision was inserted "that, if expedient, one or more states might be formed out of territory lying north of an east and west line drawn through the southern extremity of Lake Michigan." At the date of the passage of this ordinance there were no white settlers in all this vast territory, save at a few trading posts in various parts of the country, mostly occupied by the French. The act of Congress, authorizing the people of Ohio to form a state constitution, was passed April 30, 1802. In this act the boundaries of the state were defined as follows: "East by the Pennsylvania line; south by the Ohio River, to the mouth of the Great Miami; west by a line drawn due north from the mouth of the Great Miami, and north, by an east and west line drawn through the southerly extremity of Lake Michigan, running east, after intersecting the due north line, aforesaid, from the mouth of the Great Miami River, until it shall intersect Lake Erie on the territorial (British) line, and thence on the same to the Pennsylvania line."

The State Convention which formed the Constitution in November, 1802, accepted these boundaries, but, learning from a hunter, while in session, that Lake Michigan extended much farther south than shown upon the maps, they inserted a proviso, "that if the southerly bend of Lake Michigan should extend farther south than Lake Erie, or if a due east and west line should intersect Lake Erie east of the mouth of the Maumee River, then, with the assent of Congress, the northern boundary should be established by, and extended to, a direct line drawn from the southerly extremity of Lake Michigan to the most northerly Cape of Maumee Bay, intersecting the due north line from the mouth of the Great Miami, thence northeast to the territorial, (British) line."

The Territory of Michigan was organized January 11, 1805.

The act of Congress constituting Ohio a state makes no mention of the boundary proviso of the Ohio Constitutional Convention, but leaves the boundaries as originally given. In 1817 a line was run by William Harris, under instructions from the Surveyor General of the United States, commencing at a point on the Indiana line five miles, twenty-four chains and sixty-four links north of the point where a due east line from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan would strike a due north line, from the mouth of the Great Miami, and running thence north eighty-seven degrees east, with a needle variation of three degrees, thirty-two minutes, to the most northerly Cape of Maumee Bay.

This is known as the Harris line, and is the present boundary between Ohio and Michigan. In 1818 John A. Fulton surveyed the line according to the ordinance of 1787, which is still known as the Fulton line.

The United States surveys for townships and sections were closed upon the Fulton line, on the Ohio side within three years after, and on the Michigan side in 1828.

Indiana was admitted as a state in 1816, and its northern boundary, as defined by act of Congress, included "a strip of land ten (10) miles wide of the southern portion of Michigan Territory."

The territory lying between the Fulton and Harris lines constituted the disputed territory. Ohio claimed the Harris line as the boundary, and Michigan the Fulton line. Ohio organized townships, etc., in the disputed territory, and the legislatures of Ohio and Michigan passed acts declaring their respective rights, and inflicting penalties upon any who might interfere.

The question of a canal from Lake Erie to the Wabash River began to be discussed during President Jackson's administration, and the State of Indiana obtained an appropriation by Congress, of alternate sections five miles wide on each side of the proposed canal along its whole length, including the portion lying in Ohio. The State of Indiana conveyed to Ohio this portion, under the conditions of the original grant. In March, 1834, the Ohio Legislature authorized Governor Lucas to appoint three commissioners to locate the canal through Ohio.

Michigan organized her militia to arrest the commissioners, should they attempt to survey and locate the Harris line. Ohio also organized her militia to the number of ten thousand (10,000), and a collision, unless prevented by the Federal Government seemed inevitable. During the early years of this controversy, Hon. Lewis Cass was Governor of Michigan Territory, and did everything in his power to preserve the rights of his constituents. Subsequently Stevens T. Mason became acting governor and entered zealously into the contest. Governor Lucas arrived at Perrysburg about the last of March, 1835, accompanied by his staff, and the commissioners on their way to re-mark the Harris line.

General John Bell commanding the 17th Division of Ohio Militia, embracing the disputed territory arrived about the same time, and mustered into service about six hundred men, fully armed and equipped. Governor Mason of Michigan, and General Joseph W. Brown, arrived in Toledo, with a force variously estimated at from eight hundred to twelve hundred men, and went into camp prepared to resist any attempt to survey the line.

In the meantime President Jackson had appointed two commissioners — Hon. Richard Rush of Philadelphia and Colonel Howard of Baltimore — to confer with the belligerents in the interests of peace.

The commissioners, accompanied by Hon, Elisha Whittlesey of Ohio, arrived soon after and had several interviews with both governors. On the 7th of April, a proposition was submitted to the parties, which was reluctantly agreed to by Governor Lucas, but rejected by Governor Mason.

Governor Lucas disbanded his forces, to await the action of the next Congress. Governor Mason partially dismissed his troops, but still kept prepared for any emergency.

Under the impression that no further interference would be made on the part of the Michigan authorities, Governor Lucas ordered the commissioners to survey and mark the line. They proceeded to the northwest corner of the state and surveyed and marked the line for a distance of thirty-eight and a-half miles, when they were discovered by a body of the Michigan Militia and fired upon. They immediately dispersed, with the exception of nine men, to wit: Colonels Hawkins, Scott and Gould, Major Rice, Captain Biggerstaff, and Messrs. Elsworth, Fletcher, Moale and Ricketts. These were taken and imprisoned at Tecumseh, Monroe, and other places. No one was injured by the firing. General Brown, in his report, denies that the surveyors were fired upon. The breaking up of the surveying party created great excitement among the people.

Finding it impracticable to proceed farther with the survey, Governor Lucas called an extra session of the Legislature. Among the acts passed by that body was one "to prevent the forcible abduction of citizens of Ohio," and an act to create a new county to be called "Lucas" out of the northern part of Wood County, and the northwestern part of Sandusky County. The county was attached to the Second Judicial Circuit, and Toledo made the temporary seat of justice. Three hundred thousand ($300,000) dollars were appropriated, and the governor was authorized to borrow three hundred thousand ($300,000) more to carry out the laws in regard to the northern boundary. Twelve thousand (12,000) militia were reported ready for service. Michigan in turn, became exasperated by these proceedings and a quasi war was kept up along the border, with Toledo as its principal center. The difficulties were finally ended by an act of Congress making the Harris line the boundary, and giving Ohio the disputed territory. This occurred June 15, 1836.

Michigan was admitted into the Union, and the war closed, which so long had threatened the peace of the country.

This account is partly taken from Knapp's History of the Maumee Valley, and partly from a History of the Ohio and Michigan War, written by a prominent citizen of northwestern Ohio, for the columns of the Bryan Democrat. They differ somewhat in details, but agree substantially.

In common with all parts of the country, Lucas County took an active part in the great political campaign of 1840. The great services of Harrison, performed within her borders, and throughout the Northwest, gave him a prominent position, and the excitement was tremendous.

A convention, of from thirty-five thousand (35,000) to forty thousand (40,000) people, met during the campaign upon the site of Fort Meigs, and the enthusiasm inspired by its historical recollections was unbounded. Harrison was present, and made a memorable speech. Many of the veterans of the war were present, and military were there from Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Akron, and other places, and many of the ablest statesmen and orators of the country.

The Ohio portion of the Wabash and Erie Canal was completed in the Summer of 1843, which occasioned great rejoicing, and opened a new era in the history of the business interests of the valley.

The first railway in the county, and indeed the first one west of Utica, N. Y., was the "Erie and Kalamazoo" road, built in 1837, from Toledo to Adrian, laid with "strap rail" and in every way a very primitive affair. It is of this road that the story is told of a passenger train being so long making the trip from Toledo to Adrian and back, that citizens became alarmed, and sent out a posse to find the cause of the long delay. They found the train lying quiet, beside a big wood-pile in the forest. When questioned as to what he was doing, the conductor replied, that he was "waiting for the wood-pile to season."

All the railways in the county center in Toledo, and a more extended notice of them will be given in the history of the city.

A great many cities in embryo, have existed within the present limits of Lucas County, and along the south or east bank of the Maumee River, below Perrysburg. Among them were Maumee City, Perrysburg, Austerlitz, Marengo, Oregon, Port Lawrence, Vistula, Manhattan and Lucas City.

Of these Toledo has absorbed Port Lawrence, Vistula, Manhattan, Oregon and Lucas City. Austerlitz and Marengo, are entirely obliterated. Maumee City has seen its trade pass away to its more fortunate rival, Toledo, and Perrysburg has long since given up hopes of being the great emporium of the Maumee Valley. The Wabash and Erie Canal was constructed to accommodate all the rivals places as much as possible, with a side-cut and locks at Maumee, and locks at Toledo and Manhattan, but the portion below Swan Creek has been abandoned, and the great bulk of its business is now transacted in Toledo.

Including the City of Toledo, Lucas County contains nearly seventy thousand (70,000) people, and for the past fifteen (15) years its growth has been very rapid.

TOLEDO.

THE important City of Toledo is most advantageously situated for a great commercial mart, on both banks of the Maumee River, about five miles from its entrance into Maumee Bay, the head of Lake Erie. Its latitude is about 41° 40′ north, and its longitude six degrees west from Washington, or 83° west from Greenwich, England. Through its great system of lake, canals and railways, it commands the trade and commerce of a vast region, including the greatest corn-growing region in the world, and stretches out its arms to the salt and lumber regions on the north, to the grain districts of the west and south, and to the coal and iron regions of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois. Many years ago a citizen of Toledo, J. W. Scott, predicted through the columns of Hunt's Merchants Magazine, that a great emporium of trade would grow up somewhere in the lake region of the Northwest, and mentioned Toledo as one of the competing points. And although Chicago, and several other cities, are in advance, yet the present rapid increase of Toledo indicates that a score of years will place it undoubtedly as second in the list, with the prospect before it of a long and possibly successful rivalry, with the great city at the head of Lake Michigan.

Although the site of Toledo was directly in the pathway of the traders who made the Maumee River their highway from the days of La Salle and Cadillac, down to the close of 1815; and though settlements were made at various points in its immediate vicinity, yet it does not appear that any permanent settlement was attempted until 1817. In that year a Cincinnati company purchased four hundred acres near where the center of the city now is. This was a portion of the "United States twelve mile Reserve of the lower rapids of the Miami of the lakes,"—reserved by Gen. Anthony Wayne, at the treaty of Greenville, in 1795. The exact center of this reservation is near the corner of John and Dudley Streets, in Maumee City. By act of Congress, in 1816, it was ordered surveyed and sold, which was accordingly done in the year following.

The Cincinnati company laid out the Village of Port LAWRENCE the same year, 1817, and offered lots for sale at the treaty at Fort Meigs, in September.

At this sale, Major Stickney, who was an Indian agent in the west, at the commencement of the war with Great Britain, purchased a large number of lots, intending to improve them; but the failure of the Cincinnati company to meet their obligations to the Government, caused the lands to revert to the United States, when the Major compromised with the Company, and began improvements on a tract of land situated farther down the river. The Port Lawrence tract afterwards became the property of the Michigan University, who, in turn, sold it to Messrs. Baum, Oliver and Williams, members of the original Cincinnati company.

From Major Stickney's autobiography, it appears that about this time he advanced the idea of a canal to connect Lake Erie and the Wabash River to the "Western Emigrant Society," of Cincinnati, who had made the Major an honorary member of their body.

A copy of this letter (in print) was sent to De Witt Clinton, Governor of New York, who was then maturing his plans for the Erie Canal, from Albany to Buffalo.

The Governor wrote a letter to Major Stickney, in which he said: "I have found a way to get into Lake Erie, and you have shown me how to get out of it." At another time he wrote: "You have extended my project six hundred miles."

From 1817 to 1827, Major Stickney figured in every possible way to get his canal project carried through. He entered into negotiations with Governor Jennings of Indiana, Gov. Clinton of New York, Gov. Cass of Michigan, Judge Park, and others. Through the active influence of these gentlemen, the Indian title to lands in Indiana and Ohio, lying along the proposed canal route, was extinguished, with the exception of a few reservations.

In 1827, through the mediation of Messrs. Hendricks and Test, representatives from Indiana, Congress granted to that state every alternate five miles square of lands on each side of the proposed route. Soon after the State of Ohio and the Territory of Michigan became interested in the matter, and Indiana transferred the lands in Ohio to that state, with the approval of Congress, upon the condition that the latter state should construct their portion of the canal upon the terms and conditions of the original grant.

In 1832, in company with several gentlemen from Lockport, New York, Major Stickney laid out the Town of Vistula, and commenced building wharves, warehouses and dwellings.

The same year Messrs. Williams and Oliver made considerable improvements at Port Lawrence, and in 1833 the two towns were united under the name TOLEDO.

About this time commenced the famous "border war" between Ohio and Michigan, and the new Town of Toledo was claimed by the latter state, which would give them the mouth of the Maumee River, and also of the newly projected canal.

Toledo was the center of interest in this remarkable controversy, and her people knew not into whose hands they would fall; but the matter was settled in 1836, by an act of Congress, and the "Harris line" made the boundary, leaving Toledo and the mouth of the Maumee River and the canal in Ohio.

Although Toledo is situated in one of the very finest locations in the west, yet various causes combined to render its growth slow and uncertain for many years. Among these was the fact that rival towns were laid out from Maumee City to the mouth of the river, and without any country to back them, they only succeeded in injuring each other. Malarial diseases prevailed to a large extent, though perhaps not more so than in many other localities, but the jealousies of rival cities kept alive all sorts of rumors of the unhealthy locality, and consequently the tide of emigration passed on into Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. The country immediately around Toledo was heavily timbered, and being nearly level, was consequently quite wet, at times impassible. It was familiarly known as the "Black Swamp."

Sanford L. Collins, who resided at Toledo from Dec., 1831 to Feb., 1833, furnishes a list of settlers then living in the county to "Knapp's History of the Maumee Valley," by which it appears that there were the following heads of families: In the city limits, north of the river, Major B. F. Stickney, William Wilson, Wm. Riley, Hiram Bartlett, Dr. J. V. D. Sutphen, M. T. Whitney, J. M. Whitney, Harman Crane, Noah A. Whitney, and Peter Berthelf.

In what is now Washington Township, were Major Coleman, I. Keeler, Deacon S. J. Keeler, C. G. Keeler, N. A. Whitney, Jr., M. D. Whitney, Eli Hubbard, Cyrus Fisher, John Phillips, P. J. Phillips, John and Joseph Roop, Capt. A. Evans, W. R. Merritt, Charles Evans, Peter, David and Wm. Lewis, Caleb Horton, Samuel Horton, Wilson Holmes, William Sibley, Andrew Jacobs, Christian Roop, P. and A. Mattoon, Dr. Wordon, Wm. Wilkinson, Moody Mills, John Leybourn, Peter Corno, and Alexander Bernard.

In what was afterwards Manhattan, were T. Baldwin, Francis Loveway, Joseph Trombley, N. Guoir, and Peter, Robert, Alexander and James Navarre.

In Oregon were Joseph Prentice, Ebenezer Ward, Robert Gardner, and Messrs. Whitmore and Crane.

In Adams were Ezra Goodsell and O. P. Stevens. During the Spring and Summer of 1832, there arrived Capt. Samuel Allen and family, Otis Hathaway, M. H. Daniels, Daniel Washburn, C. G. Shaw, Oliver Stevens, James Maddocks, S. B. Comstock, P. Wales, Dr. Fassett, and Richard Greenwood.

Among the earliest settlers of Toledo, or Port Lawrence, as it was then called, was Joseph Prentice, who connected himself with Messrs. Baum, Oliver and Williams, proprietors of the town. This was about 1817. Mr. P. took charge of the building arrangements of the company, and erected the first warehouse and dwelling built in the place. It stood on the west side of Monroe Street. He also erected a separate dwelling soon after. Port Lawrence was named at the suggestion of Mr. Prentice, in honor of the gallant naval officer of that name.

In the frame dwelling above alluded to, which occupied the site, Nos. 33, 35, 37 and 39 Summit Street, Frederick Prentice was born December 6, 1822, being the first child born in Port Lawrence.

The brothers W. J. and M. H. Daniels, from Addison County Vermont, settled in Toledo in 1832, and opened a store on the corner of Summit and La Grange Streets. Another brother, R. C., subsequently came to Toledo.

To W. J. Daniels belongs the honor of having selected the name Toledo for the united Villages of Port Lawrence and Vistula.

In 1836 W. J. Daniels and Judge Potter were joint proprietors of the "Toledo Blade."

The first school building in Toledo was erected in 1834, by W. J. Daniels, S. B. Comstock and Stephen Bartlett. The first teacher was Mrs. M. H. Daniels. Her maiden name was Harriet Wright, and she was a niece of Hon. Silas Wright, of New York, but a native of Weybridge, Vermont.

The first court of Lucas County was held in this building. It stood near where the First African Church now is.

Hon. Richard Mott settled in Toledo in 1836. He was a Quaker of the old stock. Mr. Mott filled many positions of honor and trust in the gift of the people, including a seat in Congress from 1857 to 1861.

He furnishes a very interesting sketch of his recollections of Toledo to the "History of the Maumee Valley." Among his statements is one that the rival port of Manhattan was laid out by a Buffalo company, and great efforts were made to build up a business town, but Manhattan surrendered to Toledo about 1844–1845.

Jessup W. Scott made his first acquaintance with Toledo in June, 1832. Mr. Scott migrated from Columbia, South Carolina, in 1830, to Ohio.

In 1832 he published a monthly sheet at Norwalk, called "The Ohio and Michigan Register and Emigrants' Guide."

At that early day he predicted that a great city would grow up in the West, which, by the year 1900, would be larger than New York, and in 2000, the largest city on the globe. The prophecy, though deemed very wild at that date, is now in rapid course of fulfillment. Mr. Scott has written up a great deal of valuable information concerning the West.

In 1844 Mr. S. was editor of the "Toledo Blade."

Hon. Francis L. Nichols settled at Manhattan in January, 1836. At that time Manhattan, Oregon, Washington and a part of Adams, were included under the name of Port Lawrence. He was one of the trustees of Port Lawrence, and, after its separate organization, of Manhattan. In 1841–43 he was elected one of the associate judges of Lucas County; and in 1844 was elected clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, and of the Supreme Court of Lucas County. In 1854 he was again elected for three years.

When the Rebellion broke out the Judge, though past the military age, enlisted as a private soldier.

Among other early settlers and pioneers are the names of Gen. John E. Hunt, Hon. S. M. Young, Hon. M. R. Waite, at present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and Dr. Horatio Conant, all of whom first settled at Maumee City. Of these perhaps General Hunt takes precedence as an "old settler" of the Maumee Valley, having been born at Fort Wayne, April 11, 1798. In June, 1803, he first visited the site of Toledo, in company with his father, Col. Thomas Hunt, who began his military career on the battle fields of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and rose to the command of the First Regiment U. S. Infantry, one of the crack regiments of which St. Clair said if it had been with his army in Nov., 1791, he would not have been defeated.

In 1796 Col. Hunt was put in command of Fort Wayne; in 1798 he was transferred to Detroit, to succeed Col. Hamtramck, after the latter's decease. He had also commanded at Fort Defiance, soon after Wayne's battle with the Indians, Aug. 20, 1794.

In June, 1803, he was ordered, with his regiment, to St. Louis, and stopped over night at Fort Industry (Toledo), on his way thither. Col. Hunt died a few years later, about fifteen miles from St. Louis. He and his wife, Eunice, are buried at Bellefontaine, in Mo.

Gen. John E. Hunt passed his earlier years with his older brother, Harry, at Detroit, where Harry was in the mercantile business. He was there at the time of Hull's infamous surrender. He married Miss Sophia Spencer, at the house of Gen. Lewis Cass, of whom he is a brother-in-law, in May, 1822.

The General settled at Maumee City in 1816, as a trader, where he lived many years, a prominent citizen, and always working for the best interests of his country.

In banking and railway enterprises he always took an active part. In 1835 he was elected to the State Senate, on the Democratic ticket; and in 1849 was a member of the State Constitutional Convention.

During his term in the State Senate, he was instrumental in pushing the Wabash and Erie, and Miami Canals, to completion, and was also very active in getting the Western Reserve and Maumee road through the "Black Swamp."

In 1848 he was elected Treasurer of Lucas County, and again re-elected in 1850. He was also Postmaster at Toledo under Presidents Pierce and Buchanan.

General Hunt has probably been personally acquainted with more prominent men connected with the Maumee Valley than any man now living in the West. Among them we may mention Generals Harrison, Cass, Clay, Winchester; Colonels Johnson and Dudley, and nearly all the prominent officers who visited the valley from 1800 to 1815. He was intimately acquainted with Capt. Heald and lady, who perished in the Chicago massacre, with Capt. Wells, the celebrated Miami scout, and others. He has also seen the great chief of the Miamis, "Little Turtle,"—saw him at the treaty held at Fort Wayne, in 1808. He describes the Miami chief as a small but very fine and intelligent looking man, and a great orator. He also knew the celebrated "Tecumseh" well, and always speaks of him as one of "Nature's noblemen." He knew many of the British officers personally, among them, Gen. Proctor and Col. Short, who was killed in the memorable fight at Fort Stephenson, August 1, 1813.

He was then in Detroit, and Col. Short came into his brother's store just before the move upon Lower Sandusky, and said: "Well, Yankee," (he always called the Hunts "Yankees") I am going to fight your people, and will bring you a scalp!"

The General replied: "Those Yankees, Colonel, can take the scalp off a squirrel in the highest trees; look out or they will take yours!" The Colonel was killed in the ditch of Fort Stephenson, while leading an assault upon the works, waving his sword and crying, "Come on, and give the d——d Yankees no quarter!"

The General also knew Commodore Perry, and other officers of the lake squadron.

A large portion of Maumee City was laid out by the General in his own name and in company with Mr. Beaugrand, and he still owns lands in and around the place. At one time he owned all the river tract, No. 682. He is also President of the "Maumee Valley Pioneer Association," organized about 1860.

Hon. Morrison R. Waite was born at Lyme, Connecticut, Nov. 29, 1816, and graduated at Yale College in 1837. He studied law with his father, Hon. Henry M. Waite, who was afterwards Chief Justice of the Court of Errors for the state.

Mr. Waite removed to Maumee in October, 1838, where he studied law in the office of Samuel M. Young, and was admitted to the bar in October, 1839. He formed a partnership with Mr. Young, which continued until January, 1854. He removed to Toledo in 1850. In 1858 he formed a partnership with his brother, Richard Waite.

He was elected on the Whig ticket to the General Assembly in 1849, in a district which politically gave a majority for the Democratic party. This was the only political office he ever held.

In November, 1871, he was appointed one of the counsel for the United States before the International Tribunal of Arbitration, which met at Geneva, Switzerland, to adjust the claims of the United States against Great Britain, known as the "Alabama Claims."

On the occasion of his return from that council, a great demonstration in his honor was made by his fellow-citizens of Toledo.

At the present time he holds the highest office in the gift of the National Executive—Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Hon. S. M. Young was also quite an early settler, having first located at Maumee, where he practiced law. Mr. Young has been always a thorough business man, and done a great deal for the building up of Toledo and the various interests of the Maumee Valley. He is at present President of the Toledo National Bank.

Many others might be mentioned, perhaps equally as prominent as those so briefly spoken of, but the limits of our work forbid an extended account.

The "History of the Maumee Valley," by H. S. Knapp, to which we are indebted for much valuable information, contains a very thorough and carefully prepared history of a great number of the pioneers and business men of the valley.

The completion of the Wabash and Erie Canal, about 1843, of the Miami and Erie Canal soon after, and the opening of the T. W. and W. Railway to Fort Wayne (94 miles), July, 1855, gave Toledo an immense impetus, which influence still continues.

The other railways, completed, and prospective, are the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, consisting of two great lines to Chicago (243 miles), and several branches, penetrating the State of Michigan, and a main line running to Buffalo, New York. Mention is made, in the sketch of the county, of the first railway put in operation west of Utica, New York, the Erie and Kalamazoo.

The Dayton and Michigan is an important line, connecting Toledo and Cincinnati. It handles large quantities of grain, cotton, live stock, tobacco, hard lumber, staves and cooperage, salt, etc., etc.

The Flint and Pere Marquette road extends from Toledo through the Saginaw Valley, and westward to Lake Michigan, and does a large business in lumber, salt and grain.

The Toledo, Tiffin and Eastern passes through a rich country, and has important connections at Mansfield, including the Pennsylvania Central. This road was opened March 16, 1873.

The Columbus and Toledo road is designed as a coal road to the Hocking Valley—not yet completed.

The Atlantic and Lake Erie is a very important line, running across the state with its southern terminus on the Ohio River. The Company have extensive docks in the city for the purpose of handling coal and iron.

The Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern runs in a northwesterly direction to Frankfort on Lake Michigan. It will open the great lumber region of Western Michigan to Toledo.

The Canada Southern runs to Amherstburg, on the Detroit, where it connects with the main line to run between Fort Erie, opposite Buffalo and Chicago. This line has the best grade of any road in the United States, the maximum being only fifteen feet per mile. It has very important connections, and opens the New England and extreme eastern markets to Toledo.

The Detroit and Toledo line is a branch of the Michigan Southern.

Another road, called the Toledo and Southwestern, is designed to run through Maumee City, and thence on an air-line to Indianapolis.

The Toledo and Maumee Narrow Gauge Railway, was projected in the interests of suburban property, and was opened in August, 1874. It affords accommodations, at low rates, for the rapidly growing towns lying along the beautiful banks of the Maumee River, between Toledo and Maumee City, and has caused an immense advance in all the property along the route, including Maumee City property. The first locomative on this road was named the "John E. Hunt," in honor of the General. It was built at Pittsburgh. The beautiful and commodious passenger coach (a perfect gem in its line) was built at Litchfield, Illinois.

The commercial business of Toledo is very extensive. Her grain business is second only to that of Chicago. The receipts of grain for 1871, were thirty-five million bushels (35,000,000).

In 1872 the imports amounted to two hundred and five million dollars ($205,000,000), and the exports to nearly two hundred and eighteen millions ($218,000,000). When the improvements contemplated in the river and harbor are completed, Toledo will have as good shipping facilities as any port on the lakes.

The city has ten (10) elevators, with a storage capacity of about four million bushels (4,000,000).

The elevator of the T. W. and W. R. W., is one of the largest in the country, with a capacity of 1,200,000 bushels.

The lumber trade for 1874 will reach two hundred million feet.

The population of Toledo has increased very rapidly since 1860, when it was 13,768, to the present, (December, 1874.) It is now fully 50,000.

The ratio of increase for the decade from 1860 to 1870, of the five principal cities of Ohio, shows the following result: Toledo 136 per cent., Cleveland 112, Columbus 66, Dayton 54, Cincinnati 35, showing a rate of increase for Toledo four times as great as for Cincinnati.

The school system of Toledo is in a very flourishing condition under the thorough management of Col. D. F. De Wolf, Superintendent. It embraces 2 High Schools, 4 Grammar, 16 English Intermediate, 23 English Secondary, 10 German Secondary, 30 English Primary, and 13 German Primary, 98 in all, with 117 teachers, and over 6,600 scholars.

The city has a fine Public Library of some 8,000 volumes of well-selected works, located at present on the corner of Summit and Madison Streets.

Toledo can justly boast of an active and efficient Fire Department, and it is, no doubt, owing to this fact that the city has never had an extensive conflagration, with one exception.

An extensive and comprehensive Water-Works system is now approaching completion, which will give the city an abundant supply of water at a total cost of a half-million dollars ($500,000). The main works are located on the bank of the river near the western limits of the city. An immense crib has been sunk in the Maumee River, a large filtering reservoir constructed, and two new and powerful pumping engines placed in position, with a pumping capacity of ten million gallons in 24 hours. The main conduit pipe is 5 feet in diameter, and the standpipe is said to be the largest and loftiest in the United States, being 5 feet in diameter, and 224 feet in height, above the base, and about 265 feet above the water level in the Maumee.

There are five lines of Street Railway in operation, with extensions constantly being made.

The amount expended in the City Engineer's Department, during the past year, exceeds $320,000.

There are in the neighborhood of 50 churches in the city, some of them very fine and costly.

Toledo is also well supplied with literary, scientific and charitable institutions, and will soon boast of a university.

By the munificence of Mr. Jessup W. Scott and Hon. W. R. Raymond, of California, formerly a citizen of Toledo, a princely sum in money and lands has been placed at the disposal of the proper authorities for the endowment of a permanent institution, to be called a "University of Arts and Trades."

There are five National Banks in the city, with large aggregate capital, and a large number of private banks and exchange offices, furnishing ample facilities for the business of Toledo. There are also a number of Savings and Loan Associations in a prosperous condition.

The Masonic, Odd Fellows, and kindred fraternities, are well represented.

Of incorporated societies and companies, including the Board of Trade, Gas and Coke Light Company, Agricultural Works, Manufacturing, Commercial, Mining, Brewing, Hotel, Transportation lines, Publishing, and other corporations, there are a large number.

The press of Toledo is well represented and very ably conducted. The leading daily papers, the "Toledo Blade," the "Democrat and Herald," and the "Commercial," all rank among the most enterprising in the west, and have a large circulation.

Among the prominent public buildings of the city are the "Boody House," the Central High School, the Chamber of Commerce, Trinity and St. Paul's Churches, the "Oliver House," and several Banking Houses.

Toledo is very much in the condition of Chicago, during the transition period, when the whole city was raised to a new grade. Streets are being raised or cut down, paving is going on in various places, long lines of water-mains, gas-pipes and sewerage, are in the streets, and every where are signs of a busy and thriving community.

Transactions in real estate are becoming immense, and as many as a hundred additions have been made to the city during the past year. This estimate will include perhaps suburban property and subdivisions.

During the past year the city limits have been extended to nearly double the original ground covered by the city. The total number of acres now amounts to about 22,000, or nearly the equivalent of 36 square miles.

When the river channel shall have been improved, as contemplated, by thorough dredging and filling to the new dock lines, Toledo will have perhaps better facilities than any port on the lakes, for the transaction of the fast increasing business of the great Northwest. Its future is certainly promising.

SYLVANIA.

Judge Wilson and David White settled at the forks of the Ottawa River and Ten Mile Creek in 1832. Mr. White built the first mill on the north branch the same year. These two gentlemen entered the first land in the neighborhood.

Sylvania was laid out by Judge Wilson, on the west side of the north fork. And a town was laid out by Mr. White, on the east side of Judge Wilson's, and partly on both sides of the creek, and called Whiteford. The division line is Division Street. This was in 1833.

A grist mill on the main stream was built by a man named Cadwell, several years later.

Two saw mills were built on the south fork soon after the settlement was commenced. The upper one by Goodrich and Tremain.

Among the earliest settlers were Isaac Tremain, James Dean, Adam Gardinier, Peter Berthelf, Rowland Bird, M. M. Morris, Uriah Brown, Young and Wm. Bancroft.

The village is a consolidation of three villages, Sylvania, Whiteford, and Clark's Subdivision.

The station of the L. S. and Mich. S. R. W., is at the latter place.

There are a steam grist mill and extensive stave and heading works.

The town is finely located and does considerable business. There are 4 churches, 2 schools, 1 hotel, 1 grist and 2 saw mills, and quite a large number of stores and shops, with the usual complement of artisans and mechanics.

ADAMS TOWNSHIP.

This township was first settled about 1833. Some accounts say that Orlando Bushnell was the first settler. Wm. McMillan was also in the township the same year. Among others were Henry Kellogg, John Potter, John Bales, Galloway and Titsworth.

The early history of this township and Waynesfield is closely connected with that of Toledo and Maumee City, which see.

The rapid growth of Toledo promises soon to make property in Adams very valuable. Already the city is spreading over the eastern and southern portions, and the day is not distant when the whole country, from Toledo to Maumee City, will be a continuous city.

SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP.

This township was first settled about 1825, by six families from New York, who came up in an open boat. They settled a little southeast of where the Village of Holland now is. Their names were Silas Barnes, Wm. Van Horn, Ephraim, Cornelius and John Wiltsey, and Loomis. Jonathan Barlow settled soon after.

In September, 1829, Dennis Sage and widow Chloe Lees settled on Sec. 21. The last two are now (Dec., 1874) the oldest settlers in the township. Samuel De Mott and Joseph Devine came early.

The first school building was on Sec. 21, in 1829, and Miss Olive Gunn was the first teacher, 1829–30.

The first stationed preachers were Revds. Shortes and Fleming of the M. E. Church.

The first saw mill was built on Sec. 22, by J. Guagy.

First election held in 1836.

A post-office called Drake was opened in 1851, Samuel Devine, postmaster.

This township is justly proud of its fine district school buildings, which are all built of brick.

The Village of Holland, near the center of the township, was laid out by Robert Clark, about 1860. It contains one church (Free Methodist), a school, three stores, and a blacksmith and wagon shop, etc., etc.

The first dwelling was built by R. and C. G. Clark, in 1861.

F. G. Hall has laid out two additions to the village, and the place is improving considerably.

The L. S. and M. S. Railway passes through the town.

OREGON TOWNSHIP.

This township, under the new arrangement, is the largest in the county, and includes all that part lying east of the Maumee River and the City of Toledo. Settlements existed as early as 1808, at the mouth of the river, and the French had temporary trading posts about the middle of the eighteenth century. (See History of Lucas County in this Atlas.)

A very large amount of the eastern portion of the township is held by E. B. Ward, of Detroit, and others. Ward has a shipyard near the east end of the township, connected by a canal with Lake Erie.

There are three little corners in eastern Oregon called, respectively, New Jerusalem, Cedar Point and Jamestown, but no post-offices.

The township is still largely covered with the original forest, and there is also quite an extensive marsh bordering upon Lake Erie.

The business is principally cutting lumber and cooper stuff.

The western part of the township, adjoining Toledo, is more thickly settled and better cultivated. Several Indian, French and half-breed reservations were originally wholly, or in part, within the limits of Oregon Township, numbering 30,000 acres or more.

HISTORY OF PERRYSBURG AND MAUMEE CITY.

These two places are so blended together in all the accounts of the Maumee country, that it is impossible to write up a distinct sketch of either. Quite a settlement existed at the foot of the rapids as early as 1807, probably on both sides of the river.

Among the names of the earliest settlers we find the following: Three families of Ewings, Carter, Race, Carlin, Hill, Americans; and Beaugrand, Momeny, La Point and Peltier, French. These were principally engaged in trading with Indians and trappers.

Major Amos Spafford settled at Port Miami, as collector of customs, in 1810.

The war with Great Britain, 1812–15, broke up most of the settlements in this region, but many of the settlers returned with the advent of peace.

Prominent among the first settlers, after the war, was Dr. Horatio Conant. The Dr. was born at Mansfield, Conn., Nov. 25, 1785. He was educated at Middlebury College. In 1816 he settled at what was then called "Fort Meigs," which included Maumee City, Perrysburg, and a large extent of the surrounding country. In company with Almon Gibbs, he went into the mercantile business, and opened a store in Maumee.

About a year after his arrival he commenced the practice of medicine, making it his principal business for over fifty years. During this period he held various offices—Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Postmaster, Collector of the Port, County Clerk, and Justice of the Peace. His professional visits extended on the river from Defiance to the lake, and many miles in all directions.

The first settlement by white men was made on the spot where the ruins of old "Fort Miami" stand, in the Fall of 1680, by the Chevalier La Salle, who built a stockade fort, and it is said wintered there.

The British built a more extensive work, on the same ground, in 1794, and called it "Fort Miami." A more extended account of the early settlement of this region is in another chapter.

In 1817 Gen. John E. Hunt settled at Maumee as a trader.

Hon. M. R. Waite was also a citizen of Maumee for some years.

Jessup W. Scott settled at Perrysburg in 1833. Mr.

R. T. 83

R. T. 84

Scott is the author of many valuable articles, descriptive, and otherwise, of the Maumee Valley, and has at various times been editor and publisher of various magazines and newspapers.

Dr. Oscar White settled at Maumee in 1828. In 1833 he was employed by the U. S. Government to vaccinate 800 Ottawa Indians.

The first post-office was established at Fort Meigs in 1816, being at that time the only one between Lake Erie and "Fort Dearborn," now Chicago.

Almon Gibbs was the first postmaster. His compensation for the first year was $14.28. The office was on the Maumee side of the river.

Wood County was organized in 1820, and included all of northwestern Ohio. The county seat was at Maumee city until 1822, when Perrysburg was made the permanent seat of justice. The present county seat is Bowling Green, near the center of the county.

The first court was held in a warehouse belonging to General Hunt, and the General and David Hull had the first case in court. Judge Todd, father of Gov. Todd, was the presiding officer.

In this connection it may be mentioned that the first steamer on the lakes was the "Walk in the Water," built by Dr. J. B. Stewart, of Albany, N. Y., 1818. General Hunt was the Dr.'s agent at Maumee.

Maumee City was laid out at various times by General Hunt, J. B. Beaugrand, and others. It was a busy place for many years, until Toledo began to take advantage of its superior situation. Vessels once came up to the docks, which extended from the upper part of Maumee, down to old Fort Miami, and warehouses lined the landing.

Maumee and Perrysburg are in the center of one of the most interesting localities in the Union, and the old fortifications of "Fort Meigs" and "Fort Miami," with the localities where Proctor opened his batteries upon Harrison, and the battle fields of Dudley and Miller, are all within a cannon-shot of the public school in Maumee. These old landmarks ought to be preserved.

The Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway passes through Maumee, as also does the Wabash and Erie Canal, the latter of which furnishes considerable water-power. The new "Narrow Gauge" Railway, connecting it with Toledo, will be a great advantage to the place. No finer locations can be found than those of both Perrysburg and Maumee. The future growth of both places will depend much upon the growth of Toledo, which promises, at no distant day, to reach them.

Maumee has a splendid public school building, costing $30,000, five churches, a bank, hotel, quite a large number of mercantile houses, a paper mill, three flouring mills, a large iron foundry, a woolen factory, and various other establishments, including the usual variety of artisans and mechanics.

Perrysburgh was laid out in 1817, by the United States, at what was then deemed the head of navigation on the Maumee. The expectations were that it would become the great emporium of this portion of the West; but the great increase in the shipping interests of the lakes, and the heavier tonnage of the vessels, together with the difficulty of navigating the Maumee, and the influx of heavy capital at Toledo, changed the whole current of trade, and concentrated it at Toledo. Perrysburg was, for many years, the seat of justice of Wood County. Its growth, never rapid, has been steady.

Among the settlers at Fort Meigs, in 1820, not heretofore mentioned, were Judge Ambrose Rice, R. A. Forsythe, John Hollister, and T. W. Powell.

About 1816–17, a town was laid out between Fort Meigs and the river, and called by the high-sounding name of "Orleans of the North."

W. and J. Hollister opened a store at "Orleans," in June, 1817. Not a vestige of "Orleans" now remains.

David W. Hawley built the first frame house in Perrysburg, in the Fall of 1817.

All the trade of the country was then carried on in small schooners of from 60 to 120 tons. Among the first that traded at Fort Meigs were the "Black Snake," of 25 tons, commanded by Capt. Jacob Wilkinson, in 1815, and the "Pilot," built at Cleveland, and commanded by Capt. David Wilkinson. The principal exports were furs, fish, corn and lumber.

The first physician who settled at Perrysburg was Dr. Geo. W. Wood, in 1828.

The first lawer was Hon. T. W. Powell. Capt. David Wilkinson settled in Perrysburg in 1828. Willard T. Way settled in Perrysburg in April, 1834.

The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railway passes through the town.

Perrysburg contains 7 churches, a Masonic Lodge, one of the most flourishing in the state, Sons of Temperance and Good Templars Lodges, fine schools, including a parochial school, under control of the Catholics, a newspaper, the Perrysburg Journal, a bank, 2 hotels, about 30 Stores, a tub and spoke factory, 2 box factories, 2 stave and heading factories, one barrel factory, a tannery, grist mill, and shingle factory, 2 planing mills, 2 manufactories of furniture, one of veneering; wagon, carriage and blacksmith shops, a cigar factory, an ashery, etc., etc.

A great-grand-daughter of the Miami chief, "Little Turtle," and grand-daughter of Capt. Wells, the Miami scout, lives at Maumee City, Mrs. Mary Ann Gilbert. Her father, James Wolcott, came from Fort Wayne in a "pirogue," and settled at Maumee in 1826. Mr. Wolcott, married a daughter of Capt. Wells, who was the adopted son of "Little Turtle." Capt. Wells was captured by "Little Turtle" when a boy, and adopted into his family, and afterwards married the chief's daughter.

Wells remained true to his Indian education for many years, fighting against his white relatives like a true savage; but finally abandoned his Indian friends and entered the American service as a scout under Gen. Anthony Wayne.

The history of his adventures would fill a volume. He reached "Fort Dearborn" (Chicago) a few days before its evacuation by Capt. Heald, in August, 1812, with a band of fifteen Miami Indians, and perished in the massacre.

Mrs. Gilbert is proud of her Indian blood, which, though intermingled with three-fourths of white blood, still exhibits its ancient characteristics, in the piercing eye and moccasined foot, and is still true to the instincts of its race.

ROSS TOWNSHIP, WOOD COUNTY.

This township consists of a narrow strip, a little over one mile in width, lying on the northern portion of Wood County, and adjoining the City of Toledo and Oregon Township on the north. It is badly cut up by the various railway lines and turnpikes diverging from Toledo to the south and east.

The first settlements were made, in connection with other early settlements, along the Maumee River. (See History of Lucas County.)

Among the early settlers were Philander Wales, Robert Gardner, and Thomas Burt, in 1833. Soon after came Ezra and Job Coy, Green, Hartman, Isaac Rideout, Augustus Prentice, Michael Horton and Oscar L. Wales.

The first school house was built on Sec. 32, about 1836–7.

Mary E. Wales was the first person born in the township, May 31, 1834.

Ross Township was detached from Perrysburg Township, and erected into a separate one by an act of the Legislature, passed April 18, 1874.(?) It is a fine tract of land, mostly well improved.

CONCLUSION.

The history of Lucas County has been largely made up from information obtained of Gen. John E. Hunt, and a few others, and from the "History of the Maumee Valley," by H. S. Knapp, Esq., to all of whom we would express our sincere obligations.

Statistics of the business of Toledo were obtained from City Directories, Annual Messages of the Mayor, Reports of Water Commissioners, Board of Trade, etc., etc.

An immense amount of the most interesting material for history could be found in and around Toledo, and along the Maumee Valley, but the limits of our Atlas do not admit of the use of even a moiety.

Mr. Knapp has written up a most valuable work, and still a vast amount of most interesting matter remains for other pens.

Gen. Hunt has material from his own recollections which would furnish sufficient for a large volume, and it certainly ought to be worked up while the veteran pioneer is able and willing to give his time and attention.

The meager township history which we give has been picked up among what few "old settlers" we could find in the various townships. Of some townships we have not been able to get information. The early history of the county is believed to be reliable.
