BRIEF HISTORY OF

PAULDING COUNTY,

OHIO.

By EVERETT A. BUDD.

CHAPTER I.

PRE-HISTORIC AND INDIAN.

GIBBON, in his Decline and Fall of Rome, says that history is but little more than the register of the crimes, follies, and misfortunes of mankind. Bolingbroke, on history, says that it is philosophy teaching by examples. Webster defines it as the narration of events in the order in which they happened. With the last definition as a guide, the author will for the second time, take up the historical pen, and attempt the writing of a history of Paulding county; and trusts that along the pathway of his somewhat arduous task he may be buoyed up by the smiles and appreciation of a generous and approving public.

The history of Paulding county is fraught with romance, interspersed with tragedy; progressive in its present, hopeful in the future; and interesting throughout its every detail. The county is not as rich in specimens of pre-historic nature as are some of the other counties of the state, yet there is every evidence that portions of that strange people, the Mound Builders, once trod the primeval solitudes of our dark forests. There are no mounds worthy of note in the county, but just over its eastern border, in Perry township, Putnam county, is one whose contour is yet sharply defined. It is situated on the east bank of the Auglaize river, and is about ten feet high, and fifty feet in circumference. A few years ago this mound was examined by a shaft being sunk in its center. At the depth of four feet a human skeleton was found which was evidently the remains of some one buried there since the erection of the mound. At the depth of eight feet were found quantities of broken pottery and other articles of that extinct race, whose mysterious works left us are the only traces of their existence. Who were they, from whence did they come, and what became of them? are the questions more easily asked than answered. Regarding them, the learned may have his theory, and the mediocre and unlettered their beliefs, but the mysteriousness of the Mound Builders still remains. That there was a time in pre-historic days when huge animals, of the now extinct species, roamed the wilds of Paulding county, is abundantly verified by portions of their remains which are now and then unearthed. A very rare specimen was discovered in May, 1891, of which the Paulding Democrat says as follows: "Last Wednesday, while the son of John Cozat, a farmer residing about six miles south-west of Paulding, was engaged at some work along Flat Rock creek, he noticed something peculiar projecting from the bank into the water, and upon examination found it to be an enormous tooth, weighing 4½ pounds, which is one of the largest specimens of that kind ever found. It is thought by many, who have examined it, to be the tooth of a mastodon, an animal of the Tertiary period, and allied with the mammoth."

Indian History.—When the curtain of history rose from the dark shadows which veiled the pre-historic race, the civilized world saw the Ohio country occupied by the Wyandots (or Hurons), and the Shawnees. The latter tribe had been driven from Florida, about the year of 1750, by the Seminoles and Creeks. They had fled down the Cumberland river, and so on into Ohio, where they sought and received the protection of the Miamis. The Wyandots, the Delawares, and the Shawnees were of the Algonquin family. The Miamis, Ottawas, and Chippewas, were of the Iroquois family. By the treaty at Fort McIntosh, in 1785, the Ottawas, the Wyandots and Delawares were assigned to the northern section of what is now the state of Ohio, west of the Cuyahoga river. The Wyandots fought the invading armies of the Iroquois with desperate valor, until in a long contested battle their warriors were well-nigh exterminated and the shattered remnants of the tribe took refuge in distant Michigan. They were a race of heroes, and when General Wayne ordered his intrepid scout, Capt. Wells, to go to Sandusky, and capture a prisoner there, to get information from him, the veteran Indian fighter said: "I can easily take a prisoner, but not from Sandusky." "And why not from Sandusky?" said Wayne. To which Wells rejoined: "Because there are only Wyandots there." "Well, why will not Wyandots do?" And Wells replied, "For the best of reasons—because Wyandots will not be taken alive."

With this race of warriors out of the way, the Iroquois advanced upon the second line of Ohio defenses, and endeavored to subjugate the Miamis. But at this date a new element entered into the great game of war, with the resistless western marches of the Virginian riflemen and the British infantry. On the one hand, England enriched the Ohio tribes with armaments and gifts in vast profusion; and on the other, the United States proposed (in the Pittsburgh treaty of 1778) to the Delawares and their allied tribes to organize a friendly state, contracting to admit this aboriginal empire, when so organized, as one of the States of the Union. The tangible gifts of the British officials outweighed the rather misty promise of an Indian legislature, and the Delawares, Shawnees, Miamis, Wyandots and other tribes remained hostile to the Americans for nearly twenty years, and shattered more than one gallant army, until at last Wayne's famous American legion broke their power forever in the great general battle of Fallen Timbers.

As this legion, on its march to glorious victory, passed through the confines of Paulding county, its history, in connection with the county history, will have a direct bearing, and will be meet and proper. When the white settlements began at Marietta and along the Ohio, the war-thirsty tribes of the northwest, under the control and instigated by the British agents, began their merciless depredations. General Harmar had been defeated, and Governor St. Clair, at the head of an army, of upwards of three thousand strong, had been surprised upon the banks of the Wabash in the southwest part of Mercer county, and his force entirely destroyed or dispersed, a detail of which disaster may be found in the fragment of an old army song:

"'Twas November the fourth, in the year of ninety-one,
We had a sore engagement near to Fort Jefferson;
St. Clair was our commander, which may remembered be,
For there we left nine hundred men in the West'n Ter'tory."

This aroused Congress to a different policy. The commanding officers of the hitherto fatal expeditions might have been good generals, and undoubtedly were, in a combat with civilized armies, but they were entirely unaccustomed to an Indian warfare. How General Washington, who was reared to this class of fighting from his youth, could have committed the fatal blunder of selecting generals devoid of training in the peculiar duties demanded of them, is quite inexplicable. The lessons received, however, were not in vain. A new commander was selected, and this time a man who had fought both the whites and Indians, who possessed not only unquestioned courage, but likewise a keen conception and quick resolve in his actions, the intrepid hero of Stony Point, General Anthony Wayne. This selection was made despite the opposition of, or, as Governor Lee of Virginia, puts it, "to the extreme disgust of all orders in the Old Dominion." But the President had selected Wayne not hastily, nor through partiality or influence, and no idle words affected him.

In June, 1792, Wayne went to Pittsburgh and proceeded to organize the army which was to be the ultimate arbitrator between the Americans and the Indian confederation. Through the summer of 1792, the preparation of the soldiers was steadily attended to. "Train and discipline them for the service they are meant for," said Washington, "and do not spare powder and lead, so the men be made marksmen." In December, 1792, the forces, now recruited and trained, were gathered at a point twenty-two miles below Pittsburgh on the Ohio, in a camp which was called Legionville, the army itself having been denominated the Legion of the United States.

While Wayne's army was gathering and practicing target-shooting, the peace measures of the United States were pressed with equal perseverance. An expedition was sent to examine the field of St. Clair's defeat. This body reached its destination in February, 1792, and a letter from Capt. Buntin to St. Clair regarding the expedition says: "In my opinion the unfortunate men who were taken alive by the enemy were used with the greatest torture; and the women have been treated with extreme cruelty." Next there were peace commissioners sent to the various tribes. Colonel Trueman repaired to the Miami villages with friendly messages and offered the most reasonable terms. Other peace commissioners were sent to the Indians on the Wabash, accompanied by the Moravian missionary, John Heckewelder, and every effort was made to effect a friendly adjudication of the difficulties with the tribes.

On the part of the Indians these peace-offerings were received with a diversity of opinions. Some of the chiefs, among whom was the Wyandot war-chief, Little Turtle, urged the acceptance of the terms offered, while others, as yet intoxicated with the easy victories obtained over largely superior armies, were unwilling to listen to any argument offered. In vain did Little Turtle say them: "Brothers, we heretofore had chiefs opposed to us who were sleeping, but I say to you, the 'Great Wind' [the name given to General Wayne by the Indians] is a chief who never sleeps." They, urged on by the British, who secretly promised them succor, would hear to no terms whatsoever.

General Wayne's legion passed the winter of 1792-3 at Legionville until the last of April, 1793, when it was then taken down the river to Cincinnati. There it encamped in the vicinity of Fort Washington, on a high plateau, selected for that purpose by Wayne's quartermaster-general, Colonel Hobson, from whom the camp received the name of "Hobson's Choice." It was urged by some that the camping-ground was too far distant from Fort Washington and the town, it being located on what is now the western part of Cincinnati. Wayne, upon inquiry as to who had chosen the place, said: "Then it is Hobson's choice, and we must take it."

After encountering many obstacles, General Wayne, during the summer of 1793, was perfecting the discipline of his army at Hobson's Choice. Profiting by the errors of his predecessors, he at the same time tried to acquaint himself with every thing pertaining to the disposition of the Indians, their location, number, chiefs, and all other matters of interest to a commander of an invading army in a hostile country. He knew that he had a bold, vigilant and dexterous enemy with whom to contend. It was, therefore, indispensable to him to use every precaution in his movements to prevent a surprise. To secure his army against the impossibility of being ambuscaded, he organized a body of spies or rangers, selecting for it the best woodsmen the camp afforded. He placed this corps under the command of Captain Ephraim Kibby, who had distinguished himself as a bold and intrepid soldier. The corps was divided into two companies, one commanded by Kibby in person, and the other by Captain William Wells, who had been taken prisoner by the Indians when a boy, and had grown up to manhood with them, consequently being well acquainted with their wiles and stratagems.

On the 7th of October, 1793, Wayne's army left their camping-ground at Hobson's Choice, and removed to Fort Greenville, which, under Wayne's direction, was strongly fortified. Here they went into winter quarters, having been sufficiently provisioned to that end. Nothing in particular occurred here, excepting a skirmish with a party of Indians, who made an attack upon some soldiers who were guarding a train of supplies. The Indians were easily repulsed, with some loss on both sides.

During the spring of 1794, negotiations were again opened with the Indians, and terms of peace offered them, but they were rejected. General Wayne then pushed his advance further into the Indian country, to the place of the St. Clair disaster, where he erected a work of defense, which was named Fort Recovery, signifying that the hitherto lost ground had been recovered. This fort was in the southwest part of Mercer county, and was at once strongly fortified, and made the basis of future operations. During the advance of the army Captain Wells and his scouts were constantly making raids into the enemy's country, for the purpose of taking prisoners, from whom to obtain information. In one of these expeditions they crossed the River St. Mary, and passed on to the Auglaize. On the high bluff, about one mile north of where now stands the stirring little village of Oakwood, they came upon a party of three Indians in camp. Two of the Indians were instantly shot and killed, and the remaining one taken prisoner. When the paint was washed from him, he proved to be a white man, named Christopher Miller. He afterwards joined the scouts, and did valuable service during the remainder of the campaign. A few days afterward a Pottawatomie chief was captured near Charloe. Truly, he who meanders along the dark Auglaize in Paulding county is treading upon historic grounds.

The army remained at Fort Recovery until about the 1st of August, when, Wayne having learned from prisoners taken that the enemy had gathered in great numbers at Grand Glaize (now Defiance), he hurriedly moved upon that point. To deceive the Indians a feint was made to the westward, as if to attack the villages on the Wabash, but the army really crossed over to the Auglaize, and passed down the west bank of that stream to its confluence with the Maumee. Here Fort Defiance was erected and the troops allowed a few days' rest. On the 15th of August Wayne moved down the Maumee, and on the 18th arrived at a point just above Waterville, where he erected a temporary fortification for the protection of their stores and baggage, and named it Fort Deposit. On the morning of August 20th, 1794, the army moved on down the river to attack the Indians encamped in the immediate vicinity of Presque Isle Hill. There the battle of "Fallen Timber" was fought, and regarding it we quote from Gen. Wayne's official report: "The legion was on the right, its flank covered by the Maumee; one brigade of mounted volunteers on the left, under Brigadier-General Todd, and the other in the rear, under Brigadier-General Barbee. A select battalion of mounted volunteers moved in front of the legion, commanded by Major Price, who was directed to keep sufficiently advanced, so as to give timely notice for the troops to form in case of action. After advancing about five miles, Major Price's corps received so severe a fire as to compel them to retreat. The legion was immediately formed in two lines, principally in a close, thick wood which extended for miles on our left, and to a considerable distance in front, the ground being covered with old fallen timber, which rendered it impracticable for the cavalry to act with effect, and afforded the enemy the most favorable covert for their mode of warfare. The savages were formed in three lines, within supporting distance of each other, and extending for nearly two miles at right angles with the river. I soon discovered from the weight of their fire, and the extent of their lines, that the enemy were in full force in front, in possession of their favorite grounds, and endeavoring to turn our left flank. I therefore gave orders for the second line to advance and support the first; and directed Major Scott to gain and turn the right flank of the savages, with the whole force of mounted volunteers, by a circuitous route. At the same time I ordered the front line to advance with trailed arms, and rouse the Indians from their coverts at the point of the bayonet, and when up to deliver a close and well directed fire on their backs, followed by a brisk charge so as to not give them time to load again. I also ordered Captain Campbell, who commanded the legionary cavalry, to turn the left flank of the enemy next to the river, which afforded a favorable field for that corps to act in. All these orders were obeyed with spirit and promptitude; but such was the impetuosity of the first line that the Indians and Canadian militia and volunteers were driven from all their coverts in so short a time that, although every possible exertion was used by the officers of the second line of the legion, and by Scott, Todd and Barbee of the mounted volunteers, to gain their proper positions, but part of each could get up in season to participate in the action, the enemy being driven, in the course of an hour, more than two miles through the thick woods already mentioned. From every account the enemy amounted to two thousand combatants. The troops actually engaged against them were short of nine hundred. This horde of savages, with their allies, abandoned themselves to flight, and dispersed in terror and dismay, leaving our victorious army in full and quiet possession of the field of battle, which terminated under the influence of the guns of the British garrison. The loss of the enemy was more than that of the portion of the legion engaged. The woods were strewed for many miles with the dead bodies of the Indians and their white auxilaries, the latter being armed with British muskets and bayonets."

Wayne remained a few days in the vicinity of the battle field, laying waste to Indian villages and fields of growing corn, then returned to Fort Defiance, and thence on up the Maumee to Fort Wayne; one detachment passing up Flat Rock creek and encamping a few days about one mile southwest of Paulding, on what is now the farm of Mr. B. A. Holcombe. Inspired by this memorable march up the Maumee, a humble poet of the county has written:

> Roll on, sweet river, to Lake Erie roll;
> Thy name is inscribed on history's scroll;
> No prouder did Sherman march down to the sea,
> Than "Mad Anthony" marched along the Maumee.

The legion remained at Fort Wayne until November, 1794, then returned to Fort Greenville and went into winter quarters. Its hardships had been innumerable, but its mission had been eminently successful; and now, covered with the laurels of victory, it rested from its labors.

The Indians never recovered from their signal and decisive defeat, and soon after, at a general treaty at Greenville, sued for peace. Thus ended the Indian wars in northwestern Ohio. Their homes on the Maumee had been destroyed. Here for years they had dwelt in calm security. Its beautiful banks were studded with their villages, and the rich bottoms covered with cornfields. Here their wise men had met around the council fires, and the returning braves had exhibited the trophies of their victorious expeditions. In war the river was their base line of attack, their source of supplies and their secure refuge. But Wayne's legion spread the black mantle of desolation over the valley, and the mighty prowess of its red men was crushed forever. By treaty and purchase in 1805, 1818, 1829 and 1842, the Indians disposed of their lands, and on the last date a remnant of the Ottawas sold their last acre within the limits of Ohio, and removed the following year to the far west, settling near the mouth of the Kansas river.

The largest Indian village ever located in the county was Charloe, beautifully situated upon the left bank of the Auglaize, in Brown township. It was near the center of an Indian reserve, four miles square, and known as Oquanoxa's reserve. Here dwelt that chieftain with about 600 Indians, a portion of the Ottawa tribe, until the year of 1820, when the reservation was sold, and Oquanoxa and his followers took up their line of march toward the setting sun.

At the time of the first settlements of the county there were several straggling bands of Indians along the Auglaize and Maumee rivers. Some of the names of Indians remembered by the old settlers were Ant. Wayne, Totigose, Saucy Jack, Big Yankee Jim, Draf Jim, P. Ashway, a squaw named Songo, and two brothers, named Pokeshaw and Wapacanaugh. They were generally peaceable and kind to the settlers excepting when under the influence of "fire water." No Indian tragedies of any note ever occurred within the limits of the county. In conclusion of the Indian history of the county, what can be said of the red man of today? There are west of the Mississippi one hundred and two different Indian reservations, with a population of about two hundred and twenty-five thousand. These are under the charge of the Indian agents of the government. The plundering and pilfering to which the Indians have been subjected have not been more than hinted at by writers on that subject. The United States in its treaties always guarantees that white men shall be kept out of the reservations. This provision is continually and shamelessly violated. Another monstrous iniquity is that the Indians are being constantly moved about from one place to another. They have no property in the soil which the law respects. The great cry is that they should settle down and go to farming. What white man is there who would make a farm in the wilderness, when he knows that he may be ejected before he gathers his first crop? The only condition on which an Indian can get land for himself is to break the ties of kindred and friendship, leave his tribe, and take lands under the pre-emption and homestead law. This could rarely be done, even if the Indians were so inclined, as but very few of them could ever raise the money to pay the fees necessary for the purpose. It is clear that but one of two destinies await the Indians – extermination or civilization. Which it will be we cannot determine, as we are no prophet, and cannot lift the veil which shrouds the future of this strange and enigmatical people.

CHAPTER II.

ORGANIZATION OF COUNTY.

IN 1784, the state of Virginia ceded to the United States the great Northwest Territory, which she claimed by her charter, and by the conquest of Gen. George Rogers Clarke. This great territory embraced the present states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and that portion of Minnesota lying between the upper waters of the Mississippi and lake Superior. In 1785, congress defined the methods by which the national government would dispose of lands in its northwestern domain; and two years later came the ordinance of 1787, authorizing the board of treasury to contract with would-be purchasers of such territory. In the same year the Ohio company was formed by a syndicate of New Englanders, and in 1788, Marietta, at the mouth of the Muskingum, was the first town founded within the limits of Ohio. Washington was the first county formed in the northwest territory. It included all the eastern part of the state as far west as the Scioto river, with Marietta as its seat of justice. Hamilton county was the next to be organized, with Cincinnati as its county seat. It included that region between the two Miamis, up as far from the Ohio as an east and west line drawn through the Standing Stone fork of the Big Miami. Wayne county was the fifth to be formed in the northwest territorial region. Its boundaries are given as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Cuyahoga river, upon lake Erie, and with the said river to the portage between it and the Tuscarawas branch of the Muskingum; then down the said branch to the forks at the carrying place above Fort Laurens, thence by a line west to the eastern boundary of Hamilton county; thence by a line west and northerly to the southern part of the portage between the Miamis of the Ohio and the St. Mary's river; thence by a line, also west and northerly, to the portage between the Wabash and the Miamis of lake Erie, where Fort Wayne now stands; thence by a line west and northerly to the southern part of lake Michigan; thence along the western shores of the same to the northwest part thereof; thence by a due north line to the territorial boundary in lake Superior, and, with the said boundary through lakes Huron, St. Clair and Erie, to the mouth of the Cuyahoga river, the place of beginning." This county was organized in 1796, under the first form of our territorial government, and included within its limits about twenty-six of the present counties of northwestern Ohio, of which Paulding county is one. The old town of Detroit was the seat of justice. The few whites in this region were, like those of Detroit, Canadian French, Indian traders, or renegade tories. For more than a hundred years Detroit had been the center and headquarters of all military and commercial affairs about the head of lake Erie and the foot of lake Huron. The Maumee river country was merely an out-post or province of Detroit. Communication with the civilized world was by way of Detroit and Canada. A majority of the whites in the lake region were French, of Canadian origin, and still holding Canadian prejudices, and retaining their Canadian connections in all matters of religion, politics, friendship and commerce. Between the Detroit settlements and the settlements on the Ohio river, there existed no bond of sympathy; in fact, until 1796, they had always been the bitterest enemies, and both retained much of the old prejudices engendered by the French and revolutionary wars. Between the Maumee and the Ohio lay an almost trackless wilderness, over the whole vast extent of which there stretched a mighty and unbroken forest yet ignorant of the woodman's ax.

Ohio was the first state to be carved out of the great northwest territory. It was admitted into the union in 1802. The northwestern part was the last to be organized and settled. The Indians having ceded their lands to the whites, the legislature of the state, by an act of February 12, 1820, proceeded to divide the newly acquired territory into counties. Of these counties Paulding county is one, and it dates its creation to the year above mentioned. It was named in honor of John Paulding, a native of Peekskill, N. Y., and one of the captors of that brave and accomplished, but unfortunate officer, Maj. Andre. Regarding this capture and the execution of Andre, the writer remembers portions of an old pioneer's song, which he heard when a youth of eight or ten summers, as follows:

"Come all ye young Americans, and unto me give ear,
While I rehearse a small ditty which will your spirits cheer,
Concerning a young gentleman whose age was twenty-two.
He fought for North America, his heart was just and true.

He with a scouting party went down to Tarrytown,
Where he met a British officer, a man of high renown,
Who says unto these gentlemen, 'you're of the British cheer,
I trust if you can tell me if there's any danger near.'

Then up stepped John Paulding, for that was our hero's name,
'Sir, tell us where you're going, and also whence you came;'
'I bear the British flag, sir, a pass to go this way,
I'm on an expedition and have no time to stay.'

Then 'round him came this company and bade him to dismount.
'Sir, tell us where you're going and give us strict account;
For we are now resolved that you shall ne'er pass by.'
Upon examination he was found to be a spy.

He begged for his liberty and plead for his discharge,
And oftentimes he told them if they would set him at large,
'Here's all the gold and silver that I've laid up in store,
And when I reach the city I'll send you ten times more.'

'We want not your gold and silver that you've laid up in store,
And when you reach New York you need not send us more,
But you may take your sword in hand to gain your liberty,
And if you do conquer us, Oh then you shall be free.'

'The time it is improper our valor for to try,
For if we take our swords in hand, then one of us must die;
But should we ever meet on the bloody battle-field,
My sword should be dyed in red before I'd ever yield.'

* * * * * * * * * * *

When he was executed he looked both meek and mild,
He looked upon the spectators and pleasantly he smiled;
It moved each eye with pity, caused every heart to bleed,
And every one wished him released and Arnold in his stead.

Here's a bumper to John Paulding, and his brave company,
Their names will be enrolled on the page of history;
Paulding, Williams and Van Wert, could not be bought nor sold,
They scorned the British bribes of silver and of gold."

The base line from which the public land surveys were made was established in May, 1819, by Sylvanus Bourne. This line is the southern line of the county and extends from the Indiana and Ohio state line eastward through the counties of Putnam and Hancock, and forms the south line of Seneca county to Huron county, where it connects with lands known as the Western Reserve. The township lines were established, in 1820, by Alexander Holmes, Samuel Holmes and others; and in 1821-22 the townships were divided into sections by James W. Riley and his assistants. The county of Williams was organized February 2, 1824, and Paulding county was attached to it for judicial purposes, until its own organization in 1839. On the 4th of March, 1845, by an act of the legislature, the county of Defiance was organized. Its territory was composed of eight townships taken from Williams county, three from Henry, and a half township from Paulding. The formation of this new county reduced Paulding county to its present limits, which, were it not for the half township taken from its northeastern corner, would be a rectangle, extending east and west, twenty-four miles in length, and eighteen miles in width. It embraces within its territory ten full townships, six miles square, and Emerald township, containing thirty-two sections, and Auglaize township, containing twenty-two—in all an area of 416 square miles. It is bounded on the north by Defiance county, on the east by Putnam county, on the south by Van Wert county, and on the west by Allen county, Indiana. Its south line is the forty-first parallel of north latitude, and the meridian of eighty-four degrees and thirty minutes, west longitude, crosses the county near its eastern boundary. The numbering of townships begins on the south and run north; the ranges on the west and run east. Benton township is number 1, range 1; Harrison, town 2, range 1; Carryall, town 3, range 1; Blue Creek, town 1, range 2; Paulding, town 2, range 2; Crane, town 3, range 2; Latty, town 1, range 3; Jackson, town 2, range 3; Emerald, town 3, range 3; Washington, town 1, range 4; Brown, town 2, range 4; and Auglaize, town 3, range 4.

CHAPTER III.

THE EARLY SETTLERS.

WHEN the bright rays of civilization began to pierce the smoke of desolation, made so by the Indian wars of the northwest, they served as beacon lights to attract the attention and guide the daring
15 frontiersman into the county, and the Maumee river and the military roads, cut by Wayne's conquering army, became the routes and highways over which came the first settlers. As is the case with the first settlements of almost every country, the earliest settlers of Paulding county planted their primitive homes along the banks of its streams. On the rich alluvial bottoms of the Auglaize are yet to be seen the sites where were built the cabins of the Careys, the Hudsons, the Shirleys, the Romines and the Shroufes. Along the Maumee came the Musselmans, and the Banks and the Reynolds families; also the Gordons, the Runyans, the Murphys, the Applegates, and Gen. H. N. Curtis. On the Little Auglaize came the Harrells, the Mellingers and the Curtises; on Blue creek, the Moss brothers, the Reeds, the Barnhills, and the family of Robert Hakes; while on Flat Rock, or Crooked creek, the Woodcocks, the Malotts, and the Wentworths, were the first to tread the forest paths and to swing the "settler's echoing ax."

The first white settlement made in Paulding county was on section 19, Auglaize township, by Shadrach Hudson, in 1819. Isaac Carey came in the autumn of the same year. He came from Miami county, Ohio, by the route which had been opened by Gen. Wayne, to Defiance, thence up the Auglaize to his place of location. The farm upon which he settled is about one-half a mile east of the present village of Junction, and is owned by Reason Johnson. Upon this farm, January 21, 1826, was born Daniel Clark Carey, who has the notoriety of being the first white child known to have been born within the limits of the county. He now resides at the village of Oakwood, eight miles south of his birth-place, and is a very worthy citizen, having held the office of probate judge and other offices of public trust. A few years ago he removed to Hutchinson, Kas., but only remained about two years, when he returned to the scenes of his youth, preferring the majestic forests of Paulding county to the broad prairies of the "far west." Here, no doubt, he will spend the remainder of his days, and at their close be laid to silent rest beside the tombs of his pioneer ancestors. Shadrach Hudson was the father-in-law of Isaac Carey. Upon his farm stands the oldest house in the county. It was built of hewed logs 20x30 feet in length, about fifty years ago, and is yet in a tolerably good state of repair. It was photographed in the summer of 1890, the picture enlarged and distributed throughout the county as a pioneer relic. Nathan Shirley came in 1823, and Thomas Romine in 1825, both settling on farms on the Auglaize. The settlements on the Maumee were begun in 1825. Denison Hughes, William Banks, David Applegate, William Gordon, Reason V. Spurrier, and Gen. H. N. Curtis, came to the county about that year, and may be regarded as the first settlers of its northern part. Of these, the Banks and Gordon families came from Cincinnati; their route lay along the military roads which ran up the Miami river to its headwaters; then crossing over to the headwaters of the St. Mary's river, they loaded their household goods and wagons into pirogues and came down that river to Fort Wayne, thence down the Maumee to their respective places of landing. Their horses were unharnessed and driven across the country along the winding Indian trails that were not sufficiently wide to permit the passage of vehicles.

Joseph Mellinger commenced the little Auglaize settlement in the year of 1828, and was shortly after followed by William Harrell, Benjamin Kniss and Dimitt Mackerel. These settlers reached the county from the southern Ohio counties by crossing the water-shed which extends east and west through the state, and striking the headwaters of the Blanchard river, passed down that stream to its confluence with the Big Auglaize, thence overland to their places of settlement.

In 1834, the Moss brothers, natives of England, commenced improving farms on the banks of Blue Creek, while further up that stream, about the same year, Robert Barnhill and Joseph Reed built log cabins and began battling with the frowning forest. In 1837, Thomas Wentworth began the Flat Rock settlement. His nativity was the state of Maine. In 1835, he, with his family, left the pine-covered hills of that state, to find a home in Paulding county. He embarked upon a coasting vessel and sailed down the Atlantic to New York, and reached Buffalo by way of the Hudson river and New York & Erie canal, thence on lake Erie to Toledo, then up the Maumee to New Rochester, near the present site of Cecil. Here he rested with his family for a year or two, then cut a wagon-track road through the dark forest ten miles to the south and commenced the improvement of a farm near where now stands the interprising village of Payne.

Thus have we shown our readers the routes by which the first settlers reached the county; also their names, date of entry and places of location. We should now pay to them that tribute which is their due; and would that our unskillful pen was equal to such a task. They were men of integrity, hardy and brave, and whether they were clearing away the forests, engaged at the hand-mill in cracking corn for food, or chasing the bounding deer for the same purpose, they showed a fortitude and determination of spirit which is worthy of imitation. But they have passed away, and they who gaze upon their last resting places may say: here rest the great and good — here they repose after their generous toil. A sacred band they were, and now they take their last sleep together, while every new-born spring that is ushered in comes with its earliest flowers to deck their graves. Theirs is no vulgar sepulchre — although in many instances the green sod may be their only monument; yet it tells a nobler history than pillared piles or the eternal pyramids. Touch not, then, the ancient elms that bend their branches over the lowly graves of the first settlers of Paulding county, for their shadows fall upon the resting places of those who need no columns pointing upward to tell us that beyond the purple hills they have found a happy home.

The habits of our first settlers were, in the most part, exemplary, their hardships many and their wants few. Their houses were built of logs, with puncheon floors, clapboard roofs, and greased paper for windows. The "new country" song, of which the writer remembers a few stanzas, tells the whole story of pioneer life:

"This wilderness was our abode full fifty years ago,
And when we wished good meat to eat, we caught a buck or doe;
For fish we used the hook and line,
On Johnny-cake our ladies dine—
And pounded corn to make it fine,
In this new country."

The garb of the first settlers was of the simplest homespun. The flax patch furnished the material for the bed ticking and the tow linen for shirts and trowsers. The wool was carded, spun, woven and fashioned into garments by the nimble fingers of the pioneer's wife and daughters. They were the manufacturers of the linsey-woolsey. How often was the tired backwoodsman lulled to sleep by the sweet hum of the spinning wheel as the faithful and toiling wife plied her vocation late in the night. A few of these old dust-covered articles yet remain in the county.

Pioneer Associations.—In 1885 a pioneer association was organized in the county, and from that time to the present, annual picnics have been held by the old settlers, sometimes in Riverside park at Antwerp, but mostly on the fair grounds at Paulding. These meetings are generally largely attended and their programs consist of addresses, songs, pioneer papers, remarks by old settlers, a sumptuous repast, general hand-shaking, etc., etc. Although many of them who meet are old, infirm, and tottering on the verge of the grave, yet their hearts are still young, and the story of their pioneer hardships, struggles and privations is ever new. They meet to forget the cares and infirmities of the present and to renew again the scenes of their youth. They

"Come once more to linger o'er
The grim work of their primes;
Renewing here the grief and cheer
Of happy, hard old times."

The following are extracts from an address made by Judge D. C. Carey, at one of these pioneer meetings held at Paulding in 1885:

"The first fall after my father moved from Miami county to the wilds of the Maumee valley, he had to cast about and study how to make a living. He wasn't much of a hunter, nor much of a farmer up to that time, as his occupation had been that of a stone and brick mason. Seed wheat was very scarce. He had a little mixed with cockle and chess, which was left after moving out, and proceeded to clear off a patch of ground and sowed the mixture of seed as above stated, and he told me that the following harvest he had as good and as clean a crop of wheat as he ever saw or ever afterward raised. The chess and cockle failed that year, and that was how my father got his start in wheat." * * * "In the early times log rollings and house and barn raisings were quite common. I remember one occasion of being invited to help roll logs down on Uncle Abram Hudson's farm, four miles south of Defiance. A good many had been invited, the logs had been cut and 'niggered,' and made ready; two captains, so called, were chosen; the hands equally divided, and a yoke of oxen for each division. Now, the men start with a will and the logs began to tumble up. The heavier ones were hauled by the oxen, and the lighter ones carried by the men. The two parties seemed to race all day, and the oxen seemed to catch the same spirit, for as soon as they were hitched to a log they started for the heap, sometimes on the run, and generally stopped at the right place. Well-trained oxen were fine teams for the woods.

"There were some excellent sugar orchards along the Auglaize, Maumee and their tributaries. One fine morning in sugar-making time I started to go to the camp about one half a mile from our house, and as I passed through the woods, I saw a large wolf a few rods ahead of me, with the water still dripping off him as he had just emerged from the Auglaize river. It was a surprise to both of us; the wolf stopped suddenly and so did I, and I raised a fire shovel which I was carrying, to show fight, I suppose. The wolf, after taking a good look at me, started on and so did I, right willing to let him alone if he would me. Wolves were plentiful those days, although I seldom saw one, but could hear them howling almost every night. One wolf, it is said, can make or imitate the voice of half a dozen others.

"One lovely morning in autumn, that beautiful season of the year when all nature is clothed in the variegated hues of crimson and gold, my uncle, Samuel W. Hudson, who, by the way, was a good hunter, concluded to take a bear hunt. He came to our house and borrowed my older brother's rifle, which was named 'Old Pick.' He went up the Big Auglaize river to the mouth of Flat Rock, then up that stream two or three miles. Meat was plenty that year, and game, such as deer, squirrel, pheasants, wild turkeys, etc., was abundant, but as my uncle had started after bear, such 'small fry' failed to attract his attention. He traveled for some time and was beginning to get weary, when lo! and behold, up started a fine specimen of the object of his search. Quick as thought, 'Old Pick' was brought to my uncle's shoulder. He took aim but a second and fired. Bruin dropped, pierced through the heart. 'Old Pick' had done its deadly work. The bear proved to be a very large black one and was quite fat. My uncle came home after a team and wagon, and that evening, he and several others, among the number myself, went and brought it in. That is as near as I ever came to killing a bear—helping to load it, and riding home between its hind legs. Of course, we all had bear meat for some time in that neighborhood, and plenty of genuine 'bear's ile' for the hair and whiskers." * * * The above extracts are given to show the reader the nature of subjects touched upon by the settlers at their annual meetings. These and many other bygone scenes, such as early births, deaths, marriages, etc., are recalled to memory and talked over. Each has his story of toil, privation and hardship, or incident of romance or tragedy to relate. All are highly interesting and are listened to with intense eagerness. Think of it, ye men and women of to-day. Think of the stories they tell. Forty or fifty years ago our fathers were out in the mighty forests which covered our land, with no tools, save an ax and maul, without nails, glass, plaster (excepting mud mortar), lumber, brick, or anything with which to build a shelter for their wives and children, save forest trees and the few tools mentioned. Out there in a covered wagon, upon which fell the driving rain, the biting frosts of autumn, or the piercing blasts of winter. Out there alone—two, three, perhaps five miles from any human habitation. Would not that have tried your muscles and your souls? Yes, indeed. And these are the incidents told by our pioneer fathers at their annual gatherings. Last of all at these picnics the mortuary roll is called by the secretary of the society, and at each succeeding meeting grows larger and larger. Year by year the old settlers diminish in numbers, Year by year many of them are called away from the scenes of their early strugges and triumphs. May strength and comfort be given to those who are left, that their declining years may be their happiest ones. Sweetly rest those who are gone. Softly fall the dews of heaven upon the hallowed spots where sleep our county's pioneers.

"When the spring-time touch is lightest,
When the summer eyes are brightest,
Or the autumn sings most drear;
When the winter's hair is whitest
Sleep, old pioneer!

Safe beneath the sheltering soil
Late enough you crept:
You were weary of the toil
Long before you slept.

Well you paid for every blessing—
Bought with grief each day of cheer,
Nature's arms around you pressing,
Nature's lips your brow caressing,
With no work day woes to wound you,
With the peace of God around you,
Sleep, old pioneer."

CHAPTER IV.

TOWNSHIP HISTORY, ORGANIZATION, EARLY SETTLERS, ETC.

LOCAL history is the most interesting of all history. Let us gather up the scattered fragments while we may, put them in print, and hand them down to our posterity. A century hence and the pages which we are transcribing to-day will form one of the most treasured volumes to be found in the county. Tenderly, eagerly and carefully will our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren peruse it. Age will but add to its value, and the dust of time will only make it more precious.

The smaller the territory covered by any history the more extensive are its details. Every incident and minute particle is gathered up and transmitted to its pages. Therefore, the township history will form a most interesting feature of this work. The township lines were established in 1820, but the townships were not organized until a much later date. Three of the townships, Crane, Carryall and Brown, were organized before the county. Crane was organized in 1825; Carryall, in 1829; and Brown, in 1830. Prior to the organization of the county, the citizens of the above mentioned townships paid their taxes, attended court, etc., at Defiance, which was then the county seat of Williams county. Here, with the kind permission of the reader, we will digress a little from our subject to insert a few scraps of history taken from Harper's Magazine for July, 1863. We do this because the history referred to has a direct bearing upon the territory of which we write. The extracts are incidents of the war of 1812, and are as follows:

* * "From Fort Wayne Harrison sent out detachments to smite the Indian villages in various directions, and spread terror through their country. These were successful; and a forward movement down the Maumee was about to be commenced when General Winchester arrived at Fort Wayne, assumed command, to the great dissatisfaction of the soldiers, and Harrison returned to Piqua, where he intended to collect the mounted men from Kentucky and prepare for an expedition against Detroit. There he received a dispatch from the secretary of war, saying:

"'The President is pleased to assign to you the command of the northwestern army, which, in addition to the regular troops and rangers in that quarter, will consist of the volunteers and militia of Kentucky, Ohio, and three thousand from Virginia and Pennsylvania. He was promised artillery from Pittsburgh, and was invested with extraordinary powers. 'Exercise your own discretion,' said the secretary, 'and act in all cases according to your own judgment.' This appointment gave great satisfaction to the army, and the soldiery expressed their willingness to go wherever Harrison might lead them: Winchester acquiesced in the change, and with two thousand men left Fort Wayne on the morning of September 23d, 1812, for the rapids of the Maumee, about seventy miles distant, to co-operate with the division under Harrison in the intended operations against Detroit and Malden. He advanced cautiously down the river, had some bloody skirmishes with the Indians in the van of a large force of white and red men under Major Muir and Colonel Elliott, a notorious Indian agent, and at the close of the month arrived at the confluence of the Auglaize and Maumee rivers, where Wayne built a fort in 1794, and where the city of Defiance now stands. Muir and Elliott, taking counsel of prudence and their fears, had fled at his approach, and were then at the Maumee rapids, a point of great strategic importance, the possession of which would be essential to the Americans in successfully prosecuting their designs against Malden and Detroit."

As this detachment of troops passed down the Maumee from Fort Wayne to Defiance, it must have traversed in its march through what is now Carryall, Crane and Emerald townships, and, it is said, that one of the bloody skirmishes mentioned took place at the deep defile just below the present residence of John Musselman, Sr., in Emerald township; and in fact it is highly presumable that all of them took place within the limits of the county, as it is about the distance that an advance would be stationed, from the main body, to watch the movements and resist the approach of an invading army; and the main body of Muir and Elliott's forces were at Defiance. Again we quote from the same article: "While Winchester was making his way toward Fort Defiance, Harrison was pushing on through the wilderness from St. Mary's, in the present county of Auglaize, Ohio, toward the Maumee rapids. The difficulties in the way of transportation of supplies over that swampy region, with inadequate means, were enormous. The base of operations, having the rapids for the first object to be possessed, was a line drawn along the margin of the swampy region from St. Marys to Upper Sandusky, the former to be the principal deposit for provisions, and the latter for artillery and military stores. The army was to march in three divisions, the right column to be composed of the Virginia and Pennsylvania troops, to rendezvous at Wooster, and proceed from there by Upper Sandusky to the rapids. The center column, to consist of twelve hundred Ohio militia, was to march from Urbana to Fort McArthur, and follow Hull's road to the rapids. The left column, to be composed of the regulars under the command of Colonel Samuel Wells and four regiments of Kentucky volunteers, was to proceed down the Auglaize to the Maumee from St. Mary's, join Winchester, and from thence proceed to the rapids."

As this left column marched down the Auglaize river from St. Mary's to Defiance, it must have passed through the present townships of Washington, Brown and Auglaize, and traces of the roads cut by these troops were plainly visible to the first settlers of those townships. Upon these routes were constructed the first roads of the pioneers. Further, the historian says:

"The plan was well arranged, but supplies lingered. Winchester's troops, composing the left wing of the army, were made a corps of observation, and Fort Defiance was designated as an important deposit for provisions, preparatory to the grand advance upon the rapids."

At this place fortifications were constructed and named Fort Winchester. This fort stood eight or ten rods south of the old fort built by Wayne in 1794. It had four block-houses, connected by a continuous wall of pickets about twelve feet high, composed of logs hewn so as to stand closely together. The block-houses were considerably higher than the pickets, with an upper story extending over the lower about three feet. Port-holes and loop-holes were arranged at regular distances, both in the block-houses and stockade. The block-houses were roofed over with logs and covered with earth to prevent the bullets from passing through. There was an underground passage-way, extending from the inside of the fort to the Auglaize river, built for the purpose of escape and for obtaining water without being exposed to the shots of the Indians. The fort faced eastward toward the Auglaize river, and as late as 1822 two of the block-houses and two store-houses, built inside the fort, were yet standing in very good repair and occupied by families. In one of these resided, about one year, Judge Robert Shirley and family, before his removal to Brown township, near the present site of Charloe. With these few sketches of interesting general history, we will now proceed to the township histories direct, giving the same in alphabetical order:

Auglaize Township.—This township was attached to Brown until the year of 1840, at which time its own organization was effected. An election was called, and John Mason, Sr., and Nathan Shirley were elected the first justices of the peace; Adam Hall was elected the first constable, and A C. Adams the first clerk. The first actual settler in the township was Shadrach Hudson. He came from Miami county, Ohio, in the year of 1819, and built a log house on section 19, on the right bank of the Auglaize river, about one-half a mile east of the present village of Junction. This house is known as "the oldest house in the county," is still standing, and until recently has been occupied by dwellers. The following description of it was given in June, 1890, by a correspondent of the Oakwood Sentinel:

* * * * * "It was built by Shadrach Hudson in 1822 or '23. It is of square logs, is two stories in height, and has a huge fire-place in each end. There are two rooms on the first story. The house stands on and commands a fine view, both up and down the Auglaize river. It is a pity the old house was not engraved for the county history. It will soon be a thing of the past and forgotten. I wish that some artist would take a sketch of the building and its surroundings, which are very picturesque." (Photographs were made of the building shortly after the above was written and sold throughout the county.)

"The house is situated on what is known as the Potter farm, one mile northeast of Junction. Near by is the cemetery where sleep the Hudsons, the Careys, the Shirleys, the Romaines, the Potters, and many other deceased pioneers. Its builder, Mr. Hudson, was a soldier with St. Clair, was at the battle where that general was defeated by the Indians; also in the war of 1812, during which he visited the Maumee valley, where, being impressed with its fertility and natural beauties, he afterward settled. At one time he was a teamster employed in hauling supplies for the army. One night he arose in his sleep, harnessed his four-horse team, hitched them to the wagon, and was about to start on his tedious journey, when he awoke. Mr. Hudson and his wife lived a life of piety, and daily gathered their large family around the family altar. They were very hospitable and entertained many a stranger who chanced to pass that way. What huge roasts of bear meat, venison and wild turkey they used to make before those old fire-places! Their fumes seemed to fill the very air with their appetizing flavors. I wonder if departed ones ever come back to visit their abodes while in the flesh! If they do, what a host of them come back to that old house. In former days I often visited friends there and used to think what stories its old walls could tell if they could speak. But all are gone!

"'Moved out of the old house up into the new,
Even unto a heavenly mansion.
Thou dear, old house! Thou canst not feel nor see;
Inanimate I know, but still a dear, old house to me.'"

The township originally consisted of thirty-six sections, but upon the construction of Defiance county, in 1845, its northern half was stuck off and added to Defiance township, of that county, the sections preserving the number of the original survey. This territory was taken from Paulding county in order to make Defiance, which was to be the county seat of the newly formed county, nearer its geographical center. To increase the size of Auglaize township, after its half had been cut off, sections 13, 24, 25 and 36 were taken from Emerald township and added to it on the west. The township is, therefore, seven miles in length from east to west, and three miles wide from north to south, excepting on the west tier of sections, where it is four miles in width. Owing to this addition, this township has two sections numbered 24, two, 25, and two 36; these are distinguished from each other by the ranges, those taken from Emerald township being in range 3, and those in Auglaize proper, being in range 4. Through the carelessness of some county officials, serious mistakes are sometimes made in consequence of this arrangement of sections. For instance: A few years ago the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 36, town 3 north, range 4 east, was advertised to be sold at sheriff's sale, much to the surprise of the owner, as he knew nothing of the debt for which the sale of the land had been ordered. Upon inquiry into the matter, it was found that the land which should have been advertised was of the same description as the above, excepting the range, which should have been 3 instead of 4. This mistake in the substitution of one figure for another, slight as it was, made a difference of just six miles in the location of the two pieces of land.

The largest stream in the the township is the Big Auglaize river. It flows through the western part from south to north. Flat Rock enters the township from the south, and Little Flat Rock and Six Mile from the west; all three flow eastward and empty into the Big Auglaize. Bull Run enters from the south and empties into Big Flat Rock. Eagle creek has its source in the eastern part of the township, flows westward and discharges its waters into the Auglaize. There are several stone quarries in the township. On the farm of Samuel M. Doyle, one-half mile east of Junction, is a quarry of blue lime, and furnished stone for the construction of many aqueducts and culverts along the line of the Miami canal, when that thoroughfare of commerce was being built; also stone for the large iron bridge across the Auglaize river, near the location of the quarry. It has been idle for some years, but is being worked at present. Another quarry, on the farm of Jacob Davis, consists of blue, gray and white lime, and furnishes many parts of the county with stone for building and other purposes.

Frederick Ruffner built the first and only flouring mill in the township in 1865. It is located in the village of Junction, is a frame, with two run of buhrs, turbine water-wheel, and is furnished power from the Miami canal. Owing to the complicated condition of its ownership, the mill has not been in operation for several years. The first saw mill erected in the township was built by William K. Daggett, in the year of 1841. It was situated about one mile north of Junction, and was furnished power by water from the canal. This mill was in operation for nearly forty years. A. C. Yencer, Hubert Naveau, Jr., and John Varner now operate steam saw mills in the township.

The first school taught in the township was by A. C. Adams, in 1840. It was in a log cabin which stood on section 25, range 3, a small building with clapboard roof, puncheon floor, and stick chimney. Ten or twelve pupils were in attendance at this school. The first schoolhouse built in the township was in the village of Junction in 1854. It was a one-story frame, 28x30 feet in dimensions; a part of it is yet standing and is used as a dwelling. Upon the organization of the other subdistricts, which occurred between the years of 1854 and 1860, they were at first furnished buildings of hewn logs, but are now all supplied with good, substantial frames, excepting the one in Junction, which is a two-story brick, built in the summer of 1876, at a cost of $2,500. In sub-district number 4 (known as the Bethel school), is a large one-story frame, with two rooms on ground floor, built in 1878, by John Q. Gray, contractor, at a cost of about $1,000. The Bethel and Junction schools each employ a principal and assistant teacher; the remaining four subdistricts employ but one teacher each. About 600 pupils receive instruction at these schools. The resident teachers of the township are the Misses Emma and Katie Dotterer, Mr. Henry Schildt, Mr. Englebert Link and Miss Fronia Stover.

The first postoffice established in the township was in the village of Junction, in 1842. It was called the same as the village, and John Mason, Sr., was the first postmaster. The office still exists, and J. G. Dotterer is the present postmaster. One other office was established in 1882, named Arthur, in honor of Chester A. Arthur, who was then president of the United States. John Moore was the first postmaster at this office, and A. J. Kinnear is the present. It is located in the eastern part of the township. Junction postoffice is situated on a mail route, extending from Delphos to Defiance, and has a tri-weekly mail — Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; Arthur is on a star route leading only from that point to Defiance, and receives a bi-weekly mail — Tuesdays and Saturdays.

The first sermon preached in the township was in the cabin home of John Mason, Sr., by a Methodist minister named Solomon Biggs. The first church organization effected in the township was at Junction, in 1849, by a Methodist Episcopal minister named Adams, and the first Sabbath-school was opened the same year by that reverend gentleman. There are now five religious organizations in the township — the Christian, the Methodist, the United Brethren, the German Reform, and Catholic — all of which have church edifices, the last four named being in the Junction and the first named at Arthur, five miles east of the Junction.

The only village in the township is Juncton. It was laid out in 1842 by John Mason, Sr., and Nathan Shirley. It is situated in the western part of the township at the junction of the Wabash & Erie and Miami canals. In its early days it was a flourishing and enterprising place, so much so, that Capt. Dana Columbia sold his property on Columbia street in the now busy city of Fort Wayne, and located at the Junction, believing that he would better his chances for gaining wealth by so doing. In those days canals were the great thoroughfares for commerce, and the opening of the Wabash & Erie and Miami extension canals gave to Junction its flattering prospects. Daily lines of packets ran on both canals, and many passengers were transferred at this place. This gave a prosperous business for hotels, of which there were two or three. There were three or four large, well-filled dry goods stores and groceries; three large warehouses for the storage of grain; canal collector's office and residence, and half a dozen saloons. The wharves were lined with canal boats, loading and unloading grain and other freight, giving to the village the semblance of an embryo city, which many of its citizens believed it to be. But commerce found other channels than the canals through which to discharge its wealth; and for many years the dust of decay has been settling upon the once thriving village. The warehouses have all burned, and many of the other buildings have rotted down. The streets have a forlorn and wo-begone appearance, so much so, that if Goldsmith had traversed them he might have been inspired to improve upon his celebrated poem, "The Deserted Village," if improvement was possible. In common parlance, the place has been going "down hill" for several years, and farmers in that vicinity remark that "its site will make a good cornfield when its rubbish is moved away." H. Naveau, Sr., William Dotterer and John Shawver have three small general stores for the accommodation of a few customers, but depend on their farms for a living, and S. M. Doyle is the proprietor of the only hotel in the place.

About one mile north of Junction is the fine farm of F. W. Le Sueur, upon which is kept a fine herd of Hereford cattle. There are several fine country residences in the township, among which may be mentioned that of H. Naveau, Sr.; John G. Dotterer and Andrew Ott, of brick; and the frame residences of F. M. Wade, Isaac Hardesty and Nathan Varner. The number of voters May 18, 1891, was 258. The population of the township in 1880 was 1,068; in 1890 it was only 1,027, a decrease of 41, if the figures in both instances be correct.

Brown Township.—This township was the third to be organized in the county, which event occurred in 1830. It received its name from Fort Brown, a small stockade that was built at the confluence of the Big Auglaize and Little Auglaize rivers in the year of 1812, and occupied for a short time by a detachment of Gen. Harrison's army, commanded by Col. Brown. The stockade was soon abandoned and all traces of its fortifications are now obliterated. The township, when first organized, included Auglaize, Washington, Latty, Jackson and Blue Creek townships. Christian Shroufe was the first white man and actual settler in the township. His rude cabin and pioneer home was erected about one mile south of where now stands the thriving little village of Oakwood, on the Litchenberg farm. Mr. Shroufe settled in the township in the year of 1826. He was shortly after followed by Dr. John Kinery, Robert Shirley, John Hudson, Pierce Taylor, John Kimmell and "Grand-pap" Jeffrey. In 1837 came John W. Ayres and the Hawkins family; in 1845, Dr. Royal B. Cooper; and later, about the years of 1849-50, the flow of immigration became quite extensive and the township received a number of settlers. Among them the writer remembers the following: James M. Russell, Harrison Hanville, Jacob Keck, Andrew Linnaberry, Webster Jones, Chester Sackett, Jacob Switzer, James Mather, John and William Stair, A. L. Darling, E. W. Gleason, Dwight G. Blakeslee, Rodney Young, the Bidlack family, Daniel and Jacob May, the Robinson and Lighthill families, C. J. Freede, Sr., Eli Budd, Samuel, Andrew, Jesse and Robert Caskey, Joseph Williams, John Kretzinger and Josiah Hoover. A few years later came the Fuller and Burt families. These may all be justly classed with the pioneers of Brown township. Some of them, happy in old age, are yet living to enjoy the fruits of their early struggles; a few have found homes in other lands; but many are dead — gone to that bourne whence none return — and their descendants, now themselves whitening with the snow of age, live to honor and perpetuate the memory of their fathers by telling the story of their struggles and hardships as pioneers. The first election held in the township was at Fort Brown, in 1830, at which there were about forty-five votes cast, the voters coming from what are now Auglaize, Washington and Brown townships. The first justice of the peace elected was Dr. John Kingery. The other first officers are unknown. There are thirty-six sections in the township, none of which are fractional. The principal stream is the Big Auglaize. It enters the township near the southeast corner, flows westerly and northerly and leaves it near the northwest corner. The Little Auglaize and Blue Creek are small western affluents of the Big Auglaize.

An extensive stone quarry was worked, between the years of 1855-60, by Hon. C. L. Noble, one mile south of Charloe, also a stone mill for sawing stone, at Canal Port, near by. Neither is operated at present. The first grist mill in the township was built by Pierce Evans, in 1834. It was located on the Little Auglaize, near its mouth, and was soon washed away by high water. A saw mill was run in connection with this mill, and was the first in the township. A few rods above the former site of this mill, on the same stream, stands a flouring mill, owned by Alexander Brown. It was erected in 1849-50, by Jacob Switzer, and was for many years the only flouring mill in the township. The first steam saw mill in the township, also in the county, was erected in 1852, at Charloe, by Dwight G. Blakeslee. It is yet owned and operated by him, being quite a curiosity; the old form of upright saw is still used. Other saw mills in the township are owned by Weible & Bell, Fuller & Burt, Budd & Varner, Willis Fuller and Josiah Hoover. The first school taught in the township, was by John D. Carlton, in the year of 1834. It was taught in an unoccupied cabin on the farm lately owned by D. C. Carey, near Charloe, and fifteen or twenty pupils were in attendance. The first school-house in the township was erected at Charloe, in 1835. It was a log cabin, 20x24 feet in size. There are now ten school buildings in the township, all good substantial frames, excepting the two-story brick at Oakwood, erected in 1884, at a cost of about $2,600. The buildings at Oakwood, Charloe and Melrose, have two rooms and employ two teachers; the other districts, but one. The first postoffice in the township was at Ft. Brown. It was on the route from Piqua to Defiance, and the mail was carried on horseback once a week. On the opening of the Miami canal the route was changed and the office became extinct. The present offices are at Charloe, Oakwood and Melrose. The first sermon preached in the township was by an Methodist Episcopal divine, named J. J. Hill, in 1830. He established a church about that date near Charloe. Among its first members were Rhoda Hudson and Robert Shirley and wife. There are now seven church edifices in the township; two at Melrose, Methodist Episcopal and Disciple; two at Oakwood, the old and new Methodist Episcopal (the old one will be abandoned upon the completion of the new); Prairie Run chapel, U. B., one mile east from Oakwood; Centenary chapel, U. B., in the north part of the township, and the Lutheran, near Charloe. The first Sabbath school in the township was organized at Charloe, by C. B. West, in 1841. Regarding this pioneer Sunday-school, the Paulding Republican, of July 23, 1891, has the following: "What is esent known as the Charloe Union Sunday-school, was the first, and uently is the oldest Sunday school in Paulding county. It was zed in 1841, by C. B. West, who held the superintendency until he away in 1850. David C. Carey was then chosen superintendent, ld the office until 1870, when he was elected probate judge, which tated his moving to Paulding. Dwight G. Blakeslee was next
, and remained superintendent until 1878. Mr. Carey, having re-
, was again superintendent for one year, when, upon his moving to od, Mr. Blakeslee was reinstated, and has filled the office up to esent time. The school is in a flourishing condition, last year's average being forty-nine; for the quarter just closed it has reached hree, the highest average in the school's existence — '41-'91! Fifty s! Fifty annual elections of officers and yet only three different erintendents, excepting Eli Day and Martin Myres, who each held office three or four months. Is there a Sunday-school in this state at can excel this record?"

Canal Port St. Andrews and Newbergh are now extinct villages of he township — all three having been absorbed by Melrose. St. Andrews was laid out May 31, 1850, by James M. and Alexander Mather, two gentlemen of Scottish descent, from New Brunswick, and was named after the patron saint of Scotland. Newbergh (Royal Oak postoffice) was laid out May 7, 1851, by David Shriver and Leonard Kimmel. A. L. Darling opened the first place of business in this place in 1850. It was a small grocery store kept in the front room of a small cabin in which he resided. On a small white oak tree in front of this house, he nailed a piece of a store box, upon which was traced, in rude charcoal characters the words, "Royal Oak Grocery." From this fact came the name which the place always bore. Canal Port, on the canal, one mile north o Charloe, was known as Exchange bridge. (The towing path changed sides of canal at this place.) It was never but little more than a "paper town," although Mr. J. A. Boyd, an enterprising timber dealer of the county, for many years did an extensive mercantile business at this point, and yet resides here, in what is known as the "seven-gabled house." At Canal Port was also formerly located a stone mill, for sawing stone obtained from the Noble quarry, with which it was connected by a tramway about one-half a mile in length. At this mill for several years, between 1858 and 1868, large blocks of magnesian limestone were sawn into handsome building blocks and largely exported. The stone was a beautiful buff color, containing nodules of chert, and was found in the quarry in layers about four feet in thickness. The mill and tramway have gone to decay, and the quarry is no longer worked, although it is thought that large quantities of excellent stone could yet be obtained from it. It lies just above the mouth of Blue creek, on the west side of the Auglaize river, one mile south of Charloe. Charloe is the oldest village in the township, and will be described under the head of "County Seats," further on in the work. Oakwood was laid out as a village, September 17, 1872, by William C. Hedges, and the surveying done by L. E. Holtz, of Ottawa. As early, however, as 1851, goods were sold by John Crosson, who owned the farm upon which much of the village stands. In 1854, when the Tiffin & Fort Wayne railroad (now Nickel Plate) was being built, a general store was opened by a contractor named Hazen, and run until the road collapsed. Shortly after the war, S. S. Schiller and N. C. Whiting opened small country stores in the place, and Mr. Whiting established a ferry for the transportation of teams and passengers across the Auglaize. A postoffice was established some years before the town was laid out, on a mail route leading from Ottawa to Charloe. This route was maintained until the opening of the Nickel Plate, in 1881. The place received a boom in 1871-72, while the "Continental railway" was in process of construction, but it was not until some ten years later, on the completion of the New York, Chicago, St. Louis & Pacific railway, that it began to show signs of permanent thrift, upon which has been built a prosperous and enterprising village. It now contains the large and well conducted grocery houses of A. N. Wiseley, and Levi C. Kech; the dry goods and clothing house of Electius Wiseley; an excellent drug store, by I. L. Ackley; large hardware store, by S. S. Schisler; several restaurants; the Nickel Plate hotel, John Rumele, proprietor; Garland house, by F. Andrews; good depot building, two-story brick schoolhouse, steam flouring mill; saw mill and planing mill, Josiah Hoover, proprietor; two physicians; the Oakwood Sentinel, a weekly paper, published by C. T. Carey. The village is incorporated, and has a population of about 400.

Melrose, a rival of Oakwood in commercial importance, is located at the crossing of the Nickel Plate railroad and Miami canal, two miles west of the above described village. It was laid out, about the year 1854, by Messrs. Gibson & Pennington, but had only one house, and used only as a banking ground for ship timber until about the year of 1872, when Amos Rathburn erected a building and began business. The town remained only a small packet landing until 1881, when, upon the opening of the Nickel Plate, several large business buildings were immediately erected, among the first being that of Alex. Brown, a general store and hotel. He was followed by George W. Bentley, dry goods and groceries; the general store of J. G. Patterson & Co.; Grant & Edwards, hardware merchants; J. H. Myres, hotel; J. H. Shirley, grocery house, and several other places of business. Of the manufacturing interests of the place, the large stave works of Wheeler, Fuller & Co. are the most extensive; Messrs. Boyd & Freede have an office and lumber yard in this place, and conduct from here the largest business in the county, receiving pine and poplar lumber direct from mills owned by them in Mississippi. Melrose has good schools, good churches, is incorporated and has a population about equal to that of its only rival in the township — Oakwood. Its facilities for transportation are the best in the county, having both a railroad and canal. The canal packet "Willie," during the season of navigation, plies between this place and Defiance on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and between Delphos and Melrose on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

A few years ago the township was divided into the Melrose and Oakwood voting precincts. The number of voters in the Oakwood precinct May 18, 1891, was 376; in the Melrose precinct, 209; total number in township, 585. The population of the township in 1880 was 1,459; in 1890 it was 2,418.

Blue Creek Township.—In the year of 1837, Robert Barnhill cut a winding road up the forest-covered banks of Blue Creek, built a log cabin on the southwest quarter of section 14, and became the first actual settler of the township. He was followed in 1839 by Robert Hakes, James Cunningham and Daniel Traul, who with their families may be said to be the first settlers of the township. The settlement made by them was on sections 14 and 15, then in the heart of a dense forest, ten miles from any other settlement. These hardy pioneers, like most others, were hunters and depended largely upon the fruits of the chase for subsistence until their farms could be cleared and the cereals grown. Upon the site of this first settlement are now some of the finest farms in the county. The first white child born in the township was George Hakes, son of Robert and Caroline Hakes. He grew up to manhood, entered the Union army in the early days of the Civil war, and became one of its victims, dying of disease at Nashville, Tenn. Robert Hakes remained a few years in Blue Creek township, then became a citizen of Brown township, settling near Oakwood, where he live until happy old age, and then found rest beneath the silent clay. The descriptive location of the township is town 1, range 2 north. It was organized in 1846, but was not attached to Brown until April 6, 1857, when an election was held at the Reed schoolhouse, in sub-district number 1. At this election, the first in the township, eleven voters cast their ballots, named as follows: I. N. Glover, Joseph Reed, Hiram Davis, Alanson McCombs, John Eller, James Barnhill, Lewis Place, Samuel R. Glover, Joseph Bowyer and R. W. Haskins. The first officers elected were Joseph Bowyer, Hiram Davis and Roswell Haskins, trustees; Joseph Reed, treasurer; I. N. Glover, clerk; Alanson McCombs, assessor, and Hiram Davis, constable. There are thirty-six sections in the township, of which sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 18, 19, 30 and 31 are fractional. Robert McDaniel and Maria Barnhill were the first couple to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony in the township. This marriage contract was solemnized October 19, 1839. Blue creek, after which the township was named, is the only stream in the township, and flows through it from southeast to northwest. The soil is a rich, black loam, from one to two feet in depth. The surface is low and level, and covered with a heavy growth of ash, elm, oak, hickory, cottonwood and sycamore timber; yellow poplar, hard maple and beech are found along the creek. There are no flouring mills in the township. The first saw-mill was erected in the eastern part of the township in the winter of 1870-71; there are now several. Robinson's lumber works at Dague, and a hoop and stave factory at Scott, are the most extensive manufacturing industries of the township. The manufactory at Scott was founded about the year of 1884. Hoops and staves are manufactured. It is owned and operated by the Leeson Cooperage Company, John Leeson being the principal proprietor. J. M. Smith is the general manager. The first school taught in the township was by Marie Smith in the year of 1850. It was in a log house on the Reed farm. Seven pupils were in attendance. There are now nine districts in the township, all supplied with good houses. Dague and Scott have special districts and graded schools. The first sermon preached in the township was at the residence of Joseph Reed, in 1848, by Rev. Luther, a Free Will Baptist minister. At the same place, in 1850, Rev. Abram Shingledecker, of the U. B. denomination, organized the first church, of which the following were the first members: Joseph, Mary and Lucinda Reed, and John, Nancy, William, Hannah and Edmund Barker. The second church organized was in the winter of 1871-72, at the Reed school house, by Rev. Graham, a United Brethren minister. There are now four church societies in the township: United Brethren, Methodist, Baptist and Christian. All have church edifices. The first Sabbath-school organized in the township was at the Reed school house, in 1851, by Samuel Stone. The first postoffice was established in the township in 1872. It was located on the Paulding and Van Wert pike, and named Point Pleasant. Upon the opening of the Mackinaw railroad the office was moved to Dague. There are now four offices in the township, as follows: Dague, Folmer, Scott and Tipton

The villages of the township are Dague, Folmer and Scott. One-half of the latter is located in Van Wert county. The number of voters in the township on May 18, 1891, were, north precinct, 362; south precinct, 126; total, 488. Population in 1880, 2,406; in 1890, 2,243.

Benton Township.—This township, town 1, range 1, is the southwest corner township of the county. It received, for its first settlers, Jonathan, David and George Ball, John Northup, Daniel Malott, Henry Shugars, Jacob Henry, John Ricks, Deliverance Brown, James M. Anderson, and David Malott. The first settlement was made about the year of 1839, on section 17. The first cabin was built by Jonathan Ball, who, with his family, ventured in the forest wilds and commenced the building up of a beautiful home. Phebe E. Ball was the first white child born in the township; her parents were George and Bethena Ball. The first marriage solemnized in the township was that of David Malott and Nancy Ball, in the year of 1840. Death waved its dark wand, and Nancy, wife of Jonathan Ball, was its first victim in the township. This sad event occurred in August, 1843. Death is ever surrounded with its terrors, but among our pioneers its stern relentlessness fell with apparently a heavier stroke than in a more populous country. The solemnity of a burial among the early settlers, where a wife, mother and friend, was laid away to her lonely rest beneath the somber shade of the oak or the elm, left its sad impression for many months. The organization of the township took place in 1843, and the first election was held on the first Monday of April of that year, by order of A. H. Palmer, clerk of the board of commissioners, at the residence of John Northup, a building which stood about twenty feet north of where old Mr. Jordon now lives in the village of Payne. Thomas Wentworth, Jonathan Ball and David Malott, were judges, and Theodore G. Merchant and Daniel Malott, were clerks. The township at that time embraced within its limits what are now Harrison and Paulding townships. Six of the voters, Daniel and David Malott, William, David and Jonathan Ball, and John Northup, were residents of Benton proper; B. B. Woodcock, Niram Strout and Thomas Wentworth, lived in what is now Harrison, and John Fisher and Theodore G. Merchant, in what is now Paulding township. The officers elected at this election were: Daniel Malott, clerk; Theodore G. Merchant, treasurer; Thomas Wentworth, John Shepard and David Malott, trustees; Niram Strout, assessor; David Malott, constable; and William Ball, B. B. Woodcock and David Malott, fence viewers. An incident is related of one of the first elections of this township which is worthy of note in this work, if not worthy of imitation. It is illustrative of the honesty of purpose of the first voters of the county and is as follows: An election was held at the house of John Northup, the ballot-box being Mr. Northup's old opossum skin cap. Dana Columbia, of Junction, was a candidate for the office of county commissioner; but after the balloting had proceeded for some length of time, a horseman arrived post-haste, and by speaking so derogatorily of the character of Mr. Columbia, and by so emphatically declaring that he was not a suitable person for the office, he so influenced several of the voters as to cause them to want to change their votes. After some parleying with the judges and clerks, it was decided to begin the election over again. Accordingly the old "'possum" skin cap was turned upside down, the tickets already cast emptied out and thrown away, and a new ballot taken. This was certainly a wide departure from the Australian system of balloting, but it resulted in the defeat of Mr. Columbia, and the illegality of the proceeding was never tested. There are thirty-six sections in the township, none fractional. Flat Rock creek is the largest stream in the township, flowing from southeast to northwest. Blue creek and Paulding run are also streams in the township. The first school in the township was a select school taught by John Zimmerman, in the year of 1843; ten pupils were in attendance. The first public school was taught by W. H. Kilpatrick in 1854, in a log cabin on section 16. The first frame school house in the township was erected in the autumn of 1863. It was located on section 20, and was 20x20 feet in size. Its cost of building was $375. There are now six school houses in the township, all frame, 24x30 feet in size, and erected at an average cost of $500 each. They were all furnished with improved school furniture in 1881. The first postoffice in the township was located on section 9, and named McGill. W. H. Kilpatrick was first postmaster. The office has been removed to Payne. The only postoffice in the township at present is Batson, established in July, 1891, and located near the center of the township. It received its name from Andrew Batson, its first postmaster. The first sermon in the township was preached at the house of Bernard B. Woodcock, July 4th, 1843. The first church society was organized in 1850. It was of the United Brethren denomination, and held meetings at the residence of Deliverance Brown. A Catholic church was organized in 1865, with nine members. Services were held at the residence of John Finan until a church was erected at Payne. The population, as returned by the census of 1880, was 2,798; in 1890, it was 2,145. The township is divided into two voting precincts, viz.: Payne precinct and south precinct. At the quadrennial enumeration of 1891, Payne precinct enrolled 175 voters; south precinct, 359; total number in township, 534.

Crane Township.—This township, the first to be organized in the county, received its name from Oliver Crane, one of its early settlers. Its organization took place in 1825, and at its first election Gen. Horatio N. Curtis was elected justice of the peace. A record of the other first officers has not been preserved and their names are unknown. The first settlements were made about the year 1822. The first settlers were: Oliver Crane, Ephraim Seeley, Samuel Hughes, Ephraim Burwell, Samuel Jordan and Dennison Hughes. There were no roads at that time, and the pioneers reached the township by means of pirogues on the Maumee. There were many Indians camped along the river then, but they were generally peaceable and kind to the settlers, excepting when under the influence of whisky, at which time they were sullen and quarrelsome. Mrs. Lattimore relates an incident of an Indian named Ant. Wayne, who was cruel to his wife. One day he came home in a state of beastly intoxication, when his squaw, concluding that she would get even with her copper-colored lord, gave him a severe chastisement, which entirely cured him of his cruelty to her. At the time of the first settlement the forests of the township abounded with game, and fish was plentiful and easily obtained. It is related that the fish were so thick on the fords of the Maumee as to frighten and impede the progress of horses. The first postoffice established in the township was Cranesville, located near the site of New Rochester. There are now two offices within the township limits — Cecil and Knoxdale. The first marriage in the township was that of Mr. Young and Miss Sherry, in 1825, and was solemnized by Oliver Crane. The first school in the township was taught in 1827, in a small log house which stood on the north bank of the Maumee, about two miles northeast of Cecil. The first school house was built in the village of New Rochester, in the year of 1836. It was a log cabin 20x24 feet in size, and until a few years ago its moldering remains yet stood and were pointed out to the writer as the last house standing in the once enterprising and bustling village. All the rest had been battered down by the storms of time, and now this one, too, is gone. There are eight school districts in the township at present, all supplied with good houses. The only grist mill ever built in the township was erected on the Marie-DeLarme, in 1850. It was a small frame and was built by Zachariah Ashton. It was in operation for only a few years and has long since rotted down. The early settlers got their grain converted into flour and meal at a mill in Brunersburg, Defiance county, erected by a Mr. Perkins, in 1828-29, and was one of the first flouring mills built in the Maumee valley. Up to the erection of this mill, the nearest one to the settlers of Crane township was at Waterville, about fifty miles down the Maumee. In those early days transportation was generally done by means of pirogues on the river; but sometimes by ox teams, and the journey to and from often occupied several days and was full of hardships and danger. During these milling excursions, the wife and little ones of the pioneer remained at home alone, often with scanty fare, and with anxious hearts awaited his return. A story is told of an instance where the team of a pioneer perished in one of these trips, and he, himself, only escaped with feet and hands so badly frozen as to maim and cripple him for life. Such were the trials and hardships of the early settlers. Well may we pay to their memory that reverence which is their due. The first village of the township was New Rochester. It was located on section 11, and was laid out in 1835. It was the first county seat of Paulding county, and a more extensive history of the place will be given elsewhere in this work. Cecil and Knoxdale are the present villages of the township. Cecil, located at the crossing of the Wabash and Mackinaw railroads, was laid out April 1, 1871, by Martin N. Utley, and is now a thriving place of about four hundred inhabitants. It has a fine two-story brick school house, built in 1879; a two-story town hall, also of brick; three churches, Methodist, United Brethren and Catholic; all frame structures; fine hotel, two depot buildings, saw mill and tile factory, large stave factory, owned and operated by Beugnot Bros.; and several business houses, the principal of which may be mentioned is the large general store of M. N. Utley. Knoxdale is only a small station on the Wabash railroad, five miles west of Cecil. The population of the township in 1880 was 1,202; in 1890, it was 1,417. The number of voters May 18, 1891, was 355.

Carryall Township.— This township occupies a position in the northwest corner of the county. It was the second to be organized, and for many years was the most flourishing and populous. It derived its name from a large rock in the Maumee river, just above Antwerp, which was shaped like a boat used by the French voyagers in navigating the river, and called by them a "carryall." James Hinton settled in the township as a "squatter" in the spring of 1827. In the autumn of the same year David Applegate built the first log cabin and became the first actual settler. He was followed in 1828 by Brasier Campbell, William Banks, Reason V. Spurrier, Thomas Runyan, Robert Murphy, Sr., Zachariah Graves, Dennison Hughes and Samuel Holton. Among other early settlers are A. J. Smith, who came from New York state in 1830; Wilson H. Snook, Sr., and William N. Snook, who came from Warren county, Ohio, in 1834; Jesse Pocock and Joseph Cole, in 1844; Henry Oswalt, in 1847, and John L. Chaney, in 1850. The township was organized in 1829, and the first election was held in a log cabin which stood about one-half a mile north of the present limits of Antwerp. Twelve votes were cast at this election—the names of some of the voters being as follows: David Applegate, Richard Banks, William Banks, Thomas C. Banks, Sr., Robert Murphy, Sr., Thomas Runyan, Hugh E. Runyan, William Rodgers and A. J. Smith. The first township officers elected were: Reason V. Spurrier, treasurer; Robert Murphy, clerk; Richard Banks, William Rodgers and A. J. Smith, trustees. Many of the representative men of the township at present are descendants of the above named families. Wilson H. Snook was county commissioner nine years, and a member of the Ohio state legislature one term. He erected the first frame barn in the township, and in the orchard he planted are yet to be found trees grown from seed furnished by that famous follower of Swedenborg, generally known as "Johnny Appleseed." This eccentric individual was born in Massachusetts in 1775. His real name was Jonathan Chapman, but from the fact that he always carried a load of apple seeds with him he derived the cognomen of "Johnny Appleseed." He was a harmless old man, whose hobby was to travel from place to place along streams in the wilderness, and plant apple seeds. He traveled throughout Ohio, and even as far west as Illinois. The first orchard he planted in Ohio was on the present farm of Isaac Stodden, in Licking county. He died in Allen county, Indiana, near Fort Wayne. Several of the first settlers of the county remember of having seen him. Judge Carey has an article regarding him in the Oakwood Sentinel, of August 6, 1891, of which the following is an extract:

"He lived for others solely, so far as I remember him, denying himself all the comforts of life, unless it was the comfort of knowing that he was doing great and lasting good. 'He seemed proof against peril and empowered with ubiquity.' The Indians considered him crazy, fed and warmed him, but never molested him as he traveled through their wilds and up and down their streams; I may not be able to relate much that is new or old in regard to Johnny. When I was quite young, four or five years old, I remember he stayed at my father's house [Isaac Carey], clothed in rags, and shoes bound on his feet by strings to hold them on his feet and the pieces of shoes from parting company. He seemed as happy as a lark, and I might as well say here that he was full of exhortation and good words, a good supply of religious tracts that he distributed with a liberal hand in every cabin where they could read. Johnny was a follower and believer in Emanuel Swedenborg, and a member of the New Jerusalem church. Johnny, I remember, was not a believer in fire and brimstone combined and burning forever; for he said that he thought that the worst part of hades would not be worse than smoky houses and scolding women. But Johnny was a bachelor, and that may account for a part of that fling at the scolding women. My father, on one occasion, asked Johnny why he never married; he turned the subject by saying that in the world to come he should have a wife, 'not of flesh and blood as ye see me have,' but a spiritual wife. He would not wear good clothes. My father at one time made him a present of a pair of shoes about as good as new, expecting he would put them on; but no; he packed them away in his bundle of valuables and packed them on, saying they were too good to wear, but they would make a fine present for some needy person. Johnny not only peddled apple seeds, but catnip, pennyroyal and hoarhound, and in that way these streams in an early day had these useful herbs. Johnny, if crazy, and I do not think he was, knew where to place his nurseries at the head of streams, and then, with a canoe loaded with apple trees, float down stream with a light pot or tin pail on his head, stopping at the cabins and giving out seeds and selling, or pretending to sell, trees, as I think he but seldom, if ever, got much value for the same."

The first white child born in the township was William R. Banks, December 28, 1828. He is yet living, is justly proud of the notoriety which his birth has given him, and often furnishes pioneer reminiscences to the county papers. His parents' names were William and Hester Banks. The first marital vows that were plighted in the township were those of David P. Murphy and Nancy P. Runyan. They were married, in 1829, by H. N. Curtis, Esq. Mr. Murphy died in 1834, and his wife, after living a widow thirty-seven years, took for her second husband Dr. B. B. Woodcock. She was born in Butler county, Ohio, December 30, 1808, her parents being Thomas and Hannah Runyan, who came to the Maumee country in 1824. There are thirty-six sections in the township, none of which are fractional. The Maumee is the principal stream of the township. It enters near the southwest corner and flows northeasterly through it. Along this stream are many large tracts of bottom lands, and many fine farms. The Marie-de-Larme is a small creek which flows easterly through the northern part of the township. It has a north and south fork. Six Mile creek crosses the southern portion of the township. A reservoir, which serves as a feeder to the Wabash & Erie canal, laid partly in this township and partly in Crane. It was formed by throwing up an embankment and cutting off the waters of Six Mile creek. The reservoir was abandoned by an act of legislature in 1888, and the channel of the creek again opened as originally. A stone quarry of blue lime was formerly opened in the bed of the Maumee river a short distance below Antwerp, but is not worked at present. A man named William Roberts taught the first school in the township, in 1833. It was a select school, taught in a log cabin, and numbered about fifteen pupils. The building stood on the north bank of the Maumee, about two miles northeast of Antwerp, near the present residence of Conrad Slough. About one-half of the ground upon which the house stood has been washed away by the river. John Billieu, John Snook and R. S. Banks taught in this building in early days. There are now ten school houses in the township, all good frame structures, excepting the Union school building at Antwerp, which is a fine two-story brick, containing six rooms. The first and only flouring mill ever in the township was erected by Peter Snook and James W. Johnson, in the year of 1872. It is located in the village of Antwerp, is run by steam power, and is now owned and operated by the firm of Carr & Smith. The first saw mill was erected in 1854, by Alexander Comparet. It was run by steam power. There are now several steam saw mills in the township.

The first postoffice in the township was located about two miles east of Antwerp. It was named Paulding-Williams office. The first postmaster was Reason V. Spurrier. The first mail-carrier was John Owens. He traveled on horseback on the route lying between Fort Wayne and Defiance. The only office in the township at present is Antwerp. P. F. Harris is postmaster. The first sermon preached in this township was at the residence of William Banks, about two miles east of Antwerp, by a Methodist minister named Pryor. It is stated, however, that there was one sermon preached before this one, by a man named Wood, but as he stole a receipt for a wolf's scalp and ran away, his sermon did not have a very Christianizing effect, and was ignored by the citizens. Shakespeare's sentence, "He stole the livery of Heaven to serve the devil in," is certainly applicable to this erring divine. Was he a sheep in a wolf's clothing, or vice versa? Let us hope for him that he repented of his larcenic act and was forgiven. The first members of the Methodist Episcopal church in Carryall were William and Hester Banks, Reason and Mary Spurrier, Dennison and Hannah Hughes, Joel and Marie Munson, John and Mary Banks, Hugh E. and Sophia Runyan, W. H. Snooks and wife.

A United Brethren church was organized, in 1846, by David Landis, in a log school-house, near what was then called Clark's Corners. Some of its first members were, Rachel, Chase and Rebecca Wentworth, John and Harriet Collins, and Sophia Brown. A third church organization took place September 20, 1847, near McCormick's Corners. Richard Banks and wife, Mr. and Mrs. John Banks, Joseph Clark and wife, Jesse Brown and wife, and Susan Brown, were some of the first members. There are seven church buildings in the township — one Catholic, one Presbyterian, one Christian, two Methodist, and two United Brethren. The first Sunday-school in the township was organized, in 1850, by John Lincoln and Henry A. Brown. The only village in the township is Antwerp, of which a special history will be found in another chapter of this work. The number of voters as returned by the quadrennial enumeration of 1891, was 687. The population of the township in 1880 was 2,506; in 1890 it was 2,638.

Emerald Township.—This township, although settled as early as 1826, was not organized until 1852. Prior to that time it was attached to Crane township. The first actual settler was William Gordon, who, in the spring of 1826, built a small cabin on the bank of the Maumee, in the northwest corner of the township, and moved his family therein. In the following year the settlement begun by Mr. Gordon received an addition by the settling of George Plattor, Guy Hamilton and John Musselman, who also built cabins along the Maumee, and commenced battling with the frowning forest. Of these first settlers, John Musselman yet lives on the farm which he cleared up, and at the advanced age of ninety years is one of the best preserved specimens of pioneer life in the county. He is in the enjoyment of good health, is an extensive reader, especially of the county papers, and is thoroughly posted on all the leading topics of the day. Among other early settlers who became residents of the township may be mentioned John Fahy, who came in 1838, and Lyal Tate and Richard Carle, in 1840. These last named pioneers settled along the line of the Wabash & Erie canal, which was then in process of construction. Mr. Carle was a stone-cutter, and assisted in stone work along the canal. He died in 1880, aged about sixty-five years. Mr. Tate was a contractor on the canal, and became one of the first and most successful merchants of the township. In 1887, fifty years after his emigration to America, and Queen Victoria's jubilee year, he visited the home of his birth, in the north of Ireland, accompanied by his only son, Samuel J., and returned after an absence of six weeks. He died in Paulding in 1890, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. Fahy became a farmer near Tate's Landing, and died in the spring of 1891, aged eighty-nine years. The first election in the township was held in 1852, at the residence of Lina Parrish, on Six Mile creek. The first officers elected were: John Musselman, justice of the peace; Abraham Latty, clerk; Anthony Whippart, treasurer; and Lina Parrish, Thomas Whalen, Sr., and Richard L. Carle, trustees. The township received its name from the fact that a number of the noble "sons of Erin" had settled within its limits. The first school in the township was taught by Isaac McCowan, in a cabin belonging to David Hughes, and situated on section 5. It had a clap-board roof, stick chimney, mud fire-place, and a seating capacity of about twenty, which number of pupils attended. The first school house was located on section 6. It was built by John Musselman for a residence, but was sold by him to the township for a school house. There are now eight schools in the township (one especially for colored pupils). Three of the sub-districts have good brick buildings, and the township board of education has arranged to erect brick buildings in each of the remaining districts whenever new houses are needed. The township has two postoffices — Reid's and Emmett. Reid's was the first to be established and was so called in honor of Captain Robert M. Reid, who was largely instrumental in securing its establishment. It is located on the defunct Wabash & Erie canal, in the western part of the township. Daily mails are carried between this office and Emmett, on the Wabash railroad, two and one-half miles north of Reids.

The first religious society organized in the township was at the residence of Thomas E. Jones, in the year of 1866. Its denomination was United Brethren, and the first preacher was Michael Johnson. There are now four church organizations in the township and two church buildings. The colored U. B. church hold their meetings at the school house in sub-district No. 1. The Evangelical Lutherans held their meetings at the residences of members until the year of 1870, when the society erected a hewed log building, two miles east of Tate's landing. It is called Mt. Zion church, and is supplied by Rev. J. E. Wesner, of Paulding. The present membership is about fifty. The old school house in the Scott district was purchased by the Christian society and fitted up for a church. The first saw mill in the township was built at Tate's landing, in the year of 1859, by Francis Reiniche and his father-in-law, Theibault Didier. It has steam power, and is now owned by Francis Reiniche, who, in 1880, put in machinery for cutting staves and is now doing a flourishing business. There are no flouring mills in the township. The Maumee river is the principal stream of the township, and crosses its northwestern part. Six Mile, Gordon creek, and big and little Flat Rock creeks are its other streams. Tate's landing and Emerald are small villages in the township. Neither is incorporated. Emerald, at one time, was quite a flourishing place. For many years it was the nearest railroad station to the town of Paulding, and much of the freight and passenger traffic for that village was transferred here. It contained a telegraph and express office, hotel, two general stores, and was connected with Paulding by a daily hack line. On the opening of the Paulding & Cecil railroad, in 1880, the fate of Emerald was decided. Since that date it has been on the decline. The telegraph and express office has been removed to Cecil and the hack line to Paulding has been discontinued. Only one small grocery store is now kept in the place, and the two principal merchants of Emerald in its palmy days — Pat Haley and Peter Schehr — have become tillers of the soil. The nucleus around which gathers the mercantile business of Tate's landing is the stave factory of Francis Reiniche. He has a general store, and his son, Joseph Reiniche, and Conrad Kinkle are the proprietors of groceries and restaurants. James Powers owns and operates a tile mill and brick kiln in the southern part of the township. Peter Bakel, John W. Wortman, D. C. Thompson, John Kinzer, E. Chemin, John Powers, William Hanenkratt, P. L. Anderson and Alex. Scott, are among the prominent farmers of the township. Judge A. S. Latty, a resident of Defiance, has a fine farm and country residence one mile south of Emerald; also Judge S. T. Sutphen, of Defiance, has a fine farm and residence in the township. The township contains only thirty-two sections; sections 13, 24, 25 and 36 having been added to Auglaize township. The population of Emerald township in 1880 was 1,000; in 1890 it was 1,123. The number of voters, as returned by the assessor May 18, 1891, was 268.

Harrison Township.—To Thomas Wentworth is accredited the honor of being the first actual settler of this township. He erected a log cabin in the year of 1837, and, with his wife and little ones, soon after occupied the same. This little forest-surrounded home was located on section 36, about two miles east of where now stands the stirring village of Payne, and was, at the time of building, ten miles from any other human habitation. Mr. Wentworth, having opened up a pathway into this wild and primitive region, was shortly after followed by Phineas S. Russell, Theodore G. Merchant, Fielding A. Hughes, Niram Strout, John Sheppard, and Adam and Jonathan Snellenberger, who built cabins near that of Mr. Wentworth, thus forming what was known for many years as the "Flat Rock settlement." A few years afterward came other pioneers, who settled in various parts of the township; among these may be mentioned, David Malott, Edward Rice, Thos. Lamb, Francis Quince, John Ryel and Job Pugh. The first white child born in the township was John Russell in 1843. His parents names were Phineas S. and Louise Russell. The first couple married in the township was John Lincoln and Harriet E. Wentworth. The father of the bride, Thomas Wentworth, performed the ceremony. This couple settled in Carryall township and reared a highly respectable family of one son and two daughters. The son removed to Utah and became an eminent Methodist Episcopal minister, and the girls became successful teachers in graded schools. Mrs. Lincoln lived many years after the death of her husband, and died in 1887, respected by all who knew her. The township was organized in 1844, and the first election was held at the residence of Dr. B. B. Woodcock, on the first Monday of April, same year. Paulding township was then included in the voting precinct. The number of ballots cast was twelve. The names of voters residing in Harrison, proper, were B. B. Woodcock, Thomas Wentworth, James Wentworth, Theodore G. Merchant, Niram Strout, John Sheppard, James Lattimore and Charles C. Anderson. Those residing in Paulding township were A. F. Hughes, Daniel Sevengood, John Fisher and Joel Culver. B. B. Woodcock was the first township clerk. There are thirty-six sections in the township. All bordering on the north and west lines are fractional; the remaining ones are full sections. There are four streams in the township. The principal one is Flat Rock, which flows through the southeast corner of the township. Six Mile creek flows through the northwest corner of the township. Much of the land along this creek was injured by the back water from the reservoir, and, it is said that this township sent several volunteers to the famous "Reservoir War," which led to the abandonment of the great nuisance and reclaimed the land from the watery element. A small branch of Six Mile rises in section 18 and leaves township in section 1. Wild Cat creek is a small tributary of Flat Rock. There are no grist mills in the township. The first saw mill in the township was erected by Adam Snellenberger in 1858. It was located on the northeast quarter of section 36, and was run by water-power. There are now several steam saw mills in the township.

The first step taken toward the education of the youth was in a select school taught by Mrs. Caroline Merchant, in 1844, at the residence of her husband, Theodore G. Merchant. The building was located on section 36, and about fifteen pupils were in attendance. The school was taught more for the purpose of disseminating knowledge than for the paltry remuneration received, and proved in after years to have been seed sown upon good ground. This estimable Christian lady, then a young wife, but now for many years a widow, resides at the little city of Westerville, Ohio; and often, no doubt, as she sits at eventide by the window of her residence, and looks out upon the towering walls of Otterbein University, her thoughts wander away through the dim vistas of the past to the pioneer days of her youth when she taught a little class of backwoods pupils in the wilds of Paulding county. All honor to this first teacher of Harrison township. Let the pedagogues of to-day pay to the memory of this primitive teacher that tribute which she so richly deserves. The first school house in the township was built in the year of 1850. It was a log cabin, 16x20 feet in size, and situated on the northwest quarter of section thirty-six. There are at present eight school houses in the township; all good frame structures and supplied with modern furniture. Payne has a graded school and employs four teachers. The first post-office was located at the house of Adam Snellenberger in the year of 1858. Mr. Snellenberger was the first postmaster. The office was on a route leading from Paulding to Monroeville, Ind. It was called Payne. It was moved to Malottville in 1872, but still retained its former name; and in 1881, the name of the village of Malottville was changed to Payne, the same as the office. There is one other office in the township. It is called Smiley, and is located on the Nickel Plate railway, three miles west of Payne. The first sermon preached in the township was at the residence of Theodore G. Merchant, in the year of 1843, by Rev. Joseph Miller, a United Brethren minister. The first church society was organized at the same place, the same year, by Rev. Joseph Miller, assisted by Rev. Charles B. Gardner. It was of the U. B. denomination, and its first members were as follows: Theodore G. Merchant and wife, Niram Strout and wife, John Northup and wife; William and Sarah Sheppard, Harriet E. Wentworth, Thomas Wentworth, Jr., B. L. Wentworth, and Mrs. H. J. Woodcock. The second church was organized, in 1864, by Rev. John Brakefield, and was of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Louis Stillwell was first class leader. The first members of this society were Louis Stillwell and wife, P. W. Hardesty and wife, A. F. Hardesty and wife, Anna Hardesty, Jonathan Snellenberger and Caroline Christopher. The Flat Rock society of the Disciple church was organized March 18, 1877, with fifteen members, Elder E. Leavitt minister in charge. The first officers appointed were Samuel Wiltzie, elder, and James Bainbridge and Hiram Underwood, deacons. The first members were Samuel Wiltzie James Bainbridge, Hiram Underwood, Samuel H. Wiltzie, Jonas Fry, A. D. Underwood, Evans Wood, Silas Brattain, H. K. Gaut, Mary Wiltzie, Emma Underwood, Rachel Underwood, Alice K. Wood, Mary Bainbridge and Rachel Brattain. The first Sunday-school organized in the township was in 1854, at the Merchant school house, by Adam Hardesty. About twenty pupils were in attendance. There are now several in the township, attended by four or five hundred pupils. Such are the changes wrought out by the hand of time. The church buildings of the township are located in the village of Payne, and will be described in the Payne "write-up." Part of Payne and Smiley are the only villages of the township. The former will be given a special history, and the latter is a small station on the Nickel Plate, in the extreme southwest corner of the township. It contains a small store, postoffice, saw mill and three or four dwellings. The numbers of voters in the township, as returned May 18, 1891, was, north precinct, 166; south precinct, 327; total, 493. The population in 1880, was 772; in 1890, it was 2,252, including the part of Payne village which is in the township.

Jackson Township.—John and William Moss, two brothers, natives of England, purchased lands from the government, built a small cabin on the banks of Blue creek, in section 26, and in 1836 became the first actual settlers of Jackson township. Jesse Fox and Edmund Barker also date their coming into the township at about the same year. Among other early settlersw, ho came afterward, the names of Edward McQuestion, Deliverance Brown, John Anderson, Abram Bennett, Jacob Myers, Jotham Rollins, John Loar, William Hays and Henry Barchus may be mentioned. The township was organized in 1851 Prior to that date it was attached to Brown. The first election was held at the residence of Edward McQuestion, on what was afterward known as the Dague farm, in the spring of 1851. Ten ballots were cast at this election. The names of the voters were: Deliverance Brown, John Anderson, William Moss, William Stillwell, David Barnhill, William Hoover, Edmund Barker, Robert Barnhill, Joseph Reed, Sr. and John Barker. Deliverance Brown, John Anderson and William Barker were elected the first trustees; William Moss, clerk; Joseph Reed, treasurer; William Moss and John Anderson, justices of the peace, and John Barker, constable. The farm settled by the Moss brothers is now owned by John Bowholtz. The first white child born in the township was George Moss, son of John Moss. He grew to manhood in the county, married Miss Anna Stair, settled in Charloe as a merchant, and afterward moved to Pawnee City, Pawnee county, Nebraska, where he yet resides, a wealthy and influential citizen. His eldest son traveled in Europe, became an eminent artist and now has a studio in New York city. The first marriage contract legalized in the township was that of Edward McQuestion and Jane Barker. There are thirty-six sections in the township, none of which are fractional. The principal stream of the township is Flat Rock, flowing through the northern part. Blue creek flows through the southern part. The soil of the township is generally a black loam and very fertile; along the streams clay formations are to be found. There are no stone quarries in the township. The principal timber is oak, ash, sycamore, cottonwood, elm, maple and beech. Some poplar and black walnut was found in early days. No flouring mills were ever built in the township; and no saw mills until within the past few years, when several were built along the line of the Nickel Plate railroad. The first school taught in the township was by John D. Carlton, in 1852, in what is known as the Keck district. The building was a log cabin and seven pupils were in attendance. It was the first school house erected in the township, and stood on the north bank of Blue creek, in section 26. There are now seven sub-districts in the township, and the special district of Hedges and Broughton. All the districts have good frame houses excepting the building in the Hedges and Broughton district, which is a large two-story brick. The villages are situated about three-fourths of a mile apart, and this building is located about equi-distant between the two. It has four departments, but only three teachers have as yet been employed. The first sermon preached in the township was by a U. B. divine named Abraham Miller, in the year of 1840. He held meetings at the cabins of the settlers. The first church society was organized by him about the year of 1850. The names of the first members are Deliverance and Julia Ann Brown, John and Rebecca Anderson, Joseph and Mary Jane Crosby, Ward Dart, Mrs. Ann Dart, Mrs. Henry Barchus, William Barker and wife, John Barker and wife, Edmund Barker and wife, Elizabeth Fry, William Stillwell and John Owens. For many years this society was the largest in the township. Meetings were held in the Anderson school house, and often in summer, actuated by the sentiment that "The groves were God's first temples," its members gathered beneath the umbrageous shade of the forest trees, and poured forth their souls in pious prayer, or sang their songs of praise and thanksgiving to the Most High. In 1875 the society erected the first frame church in the township, on the bank of Blue creek, in section 26. It is yet standing and is the largest church building in the township.

The first church erected in the township was of hewed logs and was on the south bank of Flat Rock, in the northern part of the township. It yet stands and is known as "Elm Chapel." A neat frame church was erected at Hedges in the year of 1888. These constitute the churches of the township. The first Sunday-school was organized by Rev. Abraham Miller, assisted by John Anderson, in the year 1854. There are now four in the township. There are two villages in the township — Hedges and Broughton. They are both situated in the south part of the township, on the Nickel Plate railroad. Hedges was located in 1872 by W.C. Hedges, and named by him. It contains a good hotel, the Parrish house; three or four business houses, the principal of which is the mercantile establishment of W. S. Hipkins; church, depot, Bell & Co.'s hoop factory, saw mill and several residences. Broughton was laid out in 1881 by the Washington, afterward the Vanderbilt Stave and Lumber Co., of Washington, D. C., who located a large factory at this place. It was sold in 1888 to the firm of Edwin Bell & Sons, who yet control it. Connected with the factory is a large general store, now under the charge of M. E. Heller, and is the principal mercantile enterprise of the place. The village contains a fine depot building and several residences and business rooms. Axel White is the proprietor of the only drug store of the village. Prior to 1881 there were no postoffices in the township, the citizens receiving their mail at the Paulding, Junction and Charloe offices. The present offices of the township are located at Hedges and Broughton, and named the same as the villages. The county infirmary is located in the northern part of this township, two miles northeast of Paulding. By an act of the legislature, in 1889, the township was divided into two voting precincts, respectively: the north precinct and the south precinct. In May, 1891, the number of voters in the township was returned as follows: North precinct, 215; south precinct, 300; total, 515. The census of 1880 gave the township a population of 976; in 1890 it was returned as 2,266, an increase of over 132 per cent. during that decade.

Latty Township.—This township, the last to be organized in the county, occupies a place in the southern tier of townships, south of Jackson, west of Washington, east of Blue Creek, and extends on the south to Hoaglin township, Van Wert county. The township was named Latty in honor of Judge Alexander Sankey Latty, who was a resident of the county and in an official position at the time of its organization. Its first settlement began in the year of 1853. In the autumn of that year Edward Leonard Kimmell built the first cabin, on section 36, and became the first actual settler. The township was organized in 1855, and prior to this date Edward McQuestion, Lydia Kohn, Mark Pease, Lee Kohn, William Eaton and a few others had planted homes within its limits. The first election held in the township was at the cabin of Lemuel Tucker, in 1856. Nine votes were cast at this election, the names of voters being as follows: Lemuel Tucker, William Eaton, Edward McQuestion, J. Bennett, William Grove, Lee Kohn, Mark Pease, William Priest, Wilson Kohn and Adam Weimer. The first officers elected were: Justice of the peace, Adam Weimer; trustees, William Eaton, Lemuel Tucker and Fred Bennett; clerk, Edward McQuestion. The soil of the township is exceedingly fertile and is destined to become one of the best agricultural townships in the county. Within the past few years great improvements have been made in the way of ditching, building roads and clearing up farms. The ditching of Prairie creek, alone, which extends entirely across the township, cost the county about $13,000. The first school taught in the township was in a small log house which stood on the corner of William Eaton's farm. The name of the first teacher has been forgotten. Fifteen or twenty pupils were enrolled. The first school house in the township was built in 1857. It was located on the northwest corner of section 36. There are now eight school buildings, all good, commodious frames. The first saw mill erected in the township was in the year of 1872, by Philander Gilbert. The first postoffice was named Gilbert's Mills and was established in 1873. Philander Gilbert was the first postmaster. The office has been transferred to Grover Hill, a small village one and a half miles north of its former location. It is the only office in the township and bears the name of the village in which it is located. The first sermon preached in the township was at the school house in section 36, by a Methodist minister named Emanuel Kauffman. He also organized the first church society the following year. Rev. Kauffman enlisted in the late war, became a captain of Company I, One Hundredth O. V. I., and served gallantly on the tented field. His widow yet resides in the village of Antwerp. The names of some of the members of the first religious society were Hannah Kohn, A. T. and Margaret McClure, James McClure and Lucinda McClure. The second church organization was effected in 1877, by the Christian denomination. The Methodist Episcopal chapel is a neat frame structure, 32x50 feet in dimensions. The first Sunday-school was organized in 1860 by a Methodist minister named Miller. Grover Hill is the only village in the township. It was laid out, in 1887, on the prospective line of the American Midland railway, which was then being graded through the county. It was named in honor of ex-President Grover Cleveland, and ex-Congressman W. D. Hill. It is quite a busy little place, being the location of Lenhart's stave factory, and containing some good business houses and several residences. The number of voters in the township in May, 1891, was 447. Its population in 1880 was only 617; it 1890 it was 2,010.

Paulding Township.—This township occupies a central position in the county and is the most populous. It is bounded on the north by Crane; on the east by Jackson; on the south by Blue creek, and on the west by Harrison townships. The first settlement was made in the year of 1842, on Flat Rock, about four miles southeast of Paulding, by a squatter named Michael Kimmell. The first cabin was built in the spring of 1843, by John Fisher, who was really the first actual settler of the township. The first white child born in the township was Almira Fisher. Her parents names were John and Rachel Fisher. Other early settlers of the township were William Haney, Elias Shafer, Eber Barnhouse, Fielding Hughes, Theodore G. Merchant, Byron Norton, Bennett Savage, A. S. Latty, Joseph Cable, T. W. French, Nepthalian Gregory, Jacob Long, Philip W. Hardesty, Isaiah Richards, Amos F. Hardesty, Daniel Kauffman and Levi M. Barnes. The township was organized in 1851 and the first election held the same year in the town of Paulding. Seventeen ballots were cast at this election, the names of some of the voters being as follows: John Fisher, Ethan Burwell. A. S. Latty, Elias Shafer, James Chaney, Theodore Merchant and William Haney. There are thirty-six sections in the township — none fractional. The largest stream is Flat Rock. The Indians called this stream Crooked creek, and it is so named on some maps. It enters the township in section 30, and flows in a northeasterly direction entirely throughout. Big south run is a southern affluent of Flat Rock, and Big run and Opossum run are northern tributaries of the same stream. Little Flat Rock has its source in section 4, of this township, flows an easterly course, and discharges its waters into the Big Auglaize river at Junction. The first grist mill in the township was built by Elias Shafer in 1855. It was located on Flat Rock, at the foot of what is now South Main street in Paulding. It was a small frame, with one run of buhrs; was operated only for a few years and then went to decay. Portions of the old dam and frame of the building are yet to be seen, and are pointed out to the visitor as pioneer relics of a now thriving and bustling village. A steam flouring mill was erected in Paulding, in 1876, by Eugene Linn. It was never regarded as a successful enterprise and is no longer in operation. A third, and now the only flouring mill in the township, was completed in 1890, by the large manufacturing firm of Paul Weidmann & Co. It has a capacity of one hundred barrels a day, and is the best mill in the county. A further mention of it will be given in the special history of Paulding, the village in which it is located. The first saw mill put in operation in the township was a small frame, located on the left bank of Flat Rock, and furnished power by that stream. It was erected by the firm of Campbell & Forney in the year of 1852. There are now numerous steam saw mills located in different parts of the township. The manufacturing industries of the township consist mostly of staves, lumber and heading. The factories are located at the villages of Paulding, Latty, Briceton, Worstville and Holcombe, and on section 8, four miles west of Paulding. The first school taught in the township was by James M. Russell, in 1853, in a small frame school house which stood on the southwest corner of what is now the court house yard. The township is now well supplied with schools and school buildings. The first postoffice established in the township was Paulding, in the year of 1850. The name of the first postmaster was Mr. Hickerson; the present one is C. E. Cooke. There are now five offices in the township, located at Paulding, Latty, Briceton, Worstville and Holcombe. All bear the name of their respective villages, excepting the one at Holcombe, it being called Morrison, and so named in honor of the late Chief Justice of the United States, Morrison R. Waite. The first sermon preached in the township was by a United Brethren minister named John Shingledecker, about the year of 1848. A society of that denomination was organized, in 1853, by Rev. Dowing. Its first members were Sampson and Emily Merchant, and Ezra J. and Emily Smith. A Methodist Episcopal church class was organized in Paulding in 1855, with but a few members. It has now a large and flourishing congregation, with Rev. A. C. Gascoigne as pastor in charge. The third religious society organized in the township was by Rev. Allcock, a Presbyterian minister. Mrs. Jane Cable, and Dr. and Mrs. S. Kerr were its first members. The Lutheran denomination have a large class and a fine church building four miles southwest of Paulding. The Disciples organized a class in 1887 and built a church in Paulding. Latty has a Catholic congregation; also one of the United Brethren denomination. There are seven church edifices in the township, four in Paulding, two in Latty, and the Lutheran church in the western part. They are all frame structures.. There are six villages in the township, viz.: Paulding, Latty, Briceton, Worstville, Holcombe and Section Eight. Paulding will be described under a special heading. Latty, located at the crossing of the Mackinaw and Nickel Plate railroads, was laid out in 1882, by Judge A. S. Latty and Wrexham Lewis, each of whom owned lands upon which the plat was made. That portion of the town upon Mr. Lewis' land was called Wrexham, and for a time the place was called by that name. The lots laid out upon Mr. Latty's land was called Latty, and under that name the village was incorporated. At Latty is located the Eagle Stave works, owned and operated by George Marsh, a wealthy manufacturer of Van Wert. The factory employs about one hundred men, and has a capacity of 30,000 or 40,000 staves per day: The Keystone Hub works are also located here. The village contains two hotels, several dry goods and grocery stores, depot building, two churches, a two-story frame school house, and has a population, as given by the census of 1890, of 594. Briceton is a small village on the Nickel Plate, two miles west of Latty. The large stave factory of John McGee (formerly McGee & Baynes), is located here. The village contains a large dry goods store, a grocery, hotel and several residences. Worstville, on the Nickel Plate, in the southwest part of the township, is the location of Joseph Tauralt's extensive stave and lumber works. The place is supplied with dry goods stores, groceries, hotels, etc., and has a population of about 200. Mr. Tauralt's factory has twice been burned, the last time, in May, 1891. Phœnix-like it always rises from its ashes and the industry is resumed. Holcombe is a factory town, situated on the Mackinaw railroad, one mile and a half northwest of Paulding. Here is located the extensive manufacturing plant of Major A. B. Holcombe & Co., known as the Holcombe Stave and Lumber Mills. A large general store is run in connection with the factory. The place contains a boarding house and several residences, generally the homes of employes in the factory. Thrift and prosperity hover around the village, and the sweet hum of industry pervades its streets. Similar to Holcombe is Section Eight. There is located one of the large stave factories owned by Mr. Paul Weidmann, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Holcombe and Section Eight have never been regularly laid out as villages, but may be regarded as purely factory towns. The population of Paulding township in 1880 was 1,065; in 1890 it was (including all its villages), 4,492. The number of voters, as returned by the quadrennial enrollment of 1891, was, Paulding precinct, 846; Briceton precinct, 357; total, 1,203.

Washington Township.—This township, the last in alphabetical order, occupies a position in the souteast corner of the county. Its descriptive location is town 1, range 4. It is bounded on the north by Brown township; on the east by Perry and Jackson townships, Putnam county; on the south by Monterey township, Putnam county, and Jackson township, Van Wert county; and on the west by Latty township. Its first settlement was begun, in 1826, by a hardy poineer named Joseph Mellinger, who built a cabin on section 22, and became the first actual settler. In 827 came William Harrell, Dimmitt Mackerel, John Curtis, Benjamin Kniss and Daniel Ridenour, who built cabins on section 10, and commenced clearing away the forest. The first white child born in the township was Martha Harrell. Her parents names were William and Martha Harrell. Mary Curtis, daughter of John Curtis, was also born the same year. The first marriage solemnized in the township was that of John Andrews and Ella Crossley, in the year of 1830. The township was organized in 1840, and the first election held in the spring of that year, at the house of William Harrell. At this election eleven voters exercised the right of suffrage, named as follows: Abel Crossley, Henry Myers, Joseph Mellinger, John Curtis, Jesse Harrell, Daniel Ridenour, Dimmitt Mackerel, Harrison Mellinger, David Mellinger, David Harrell and Benjamin Kniss. John Curtis was elected the first justice of the peace; and Joseph Mellinger, William Harrell and Abel Crossley the first trustees. The first grist mill erected in the township was by William Harrell, in the year of 1842, on the Little Auglaize river, near the present site of Murat. It was a small frame, with one run of buhrs, and was furnished power by the water of the stream upon which it was located. A saw mill was connected with it. For many years John J. Hipp owned and operated a flouring mill and saw mill at Hipp's lock, power furnished by water from the Miami canal. There are now several steam saw mills in the township. The first school house erected in the township was in 1843. It was a small log cabin and in it Lydia Harrell taught the first school, with an enrollment of twelve pupils. The house was located on section 15. There are now eleven schools in the township, two of which are for the education of colored youth, and taught by colored teachers. The school buildings are all neat, commodious frames.

The first postoffice established in the townnship was Doylestown, located on the canal, a short distance south of Timberville. It was named by Samuel Doyle, Sr., who ran a packet line on the canal and carried the United States mail from Cincinnati to Toledo. The office has long since been discontinued, as has the office at Murat. The present offices of the township are Timberville, Hamer and Plumb's X Roads. The first sermon preached in the township was at the residence of Joseph Mellinger, in the year of 1831, by a Methodist Episcopal minister named J. J. Hill. He rode a circuit, commencing at St. Mary's, and taking in Willshire, Shane's Crossing, Mellinger's, Antwerp, Defiance and Florida; thence returning to St. Mary's. The distance traveled was about three hundred miles, and the compensation received was $105 per year. The second religious society organized was near the residence of Joseph Mellinger. Its first members were Sarah Blossom, John and Susan Smith, and Elwood and Margaret Pease. Their first minister was Rev. Dr. Shingledecker. Afterward came Revs. Abraham Miller, C. B. Whitley, J. B. Holden, Michael Johnson and William Kendall. The Mellinger chapel is a neat frame church, located near the center of the township. The villages of the township are Murat, Timberville, Hamer and Plumb's X Roads. Murat was laidout, in 1853, by Jesse Harrell, on both sides of the canal, and on the east half of the northwest quarter of section 10. In its palmy days it only contained a small store or two, and is now extinct. Timberville is a small canal town, one mile south of Murat. Hamer is a small village, also on the canal, in the southeast corner of the township. Plumb's X Roads is located in the southern part of the township, two miles west of Hamer. The route of the Midland railroad extends east and west through this township and is graded through it. The largest stream of the township is the Big Auglaize. It flows through the northwest corner. The Little Auglaize river enters the township near its southeast corner and flows northward through its central part. Dog creek, Middle creek and Prairie creek are western tributaries of the Little Auglaize. West branch is a southern tributary of Prairie creek. The township contains a colony of colored people who, for the most part, are in a thrifty and prosperous condition. Some of them are well educated and have held township offices. There are also some colored people located in Emerald, Jackson, Paulding and Blue creek townships; but the greatest number are to be found in Washington township. Many of these were formerly slaves in Kentucky, and were liberated before the war; others were born free in the southern part of the state. The population of the township, as returned by the census of 1880, was 1,346; by the census of 1890, it was 1,901. The number of voters returned May 18, 1891, was 446.

CHAPTER V.

COUNTY SEATS, COUNTY BUILDINGS, ETC.

FOLLOWING the organization of the county, the first county seat was located at New Rochester in the fall of 1839. This was at that time the largest and most flourishing village in the county. It was situated on the south bank of the Maumee river, about one mile north of the present village of Cecil. It was laid out in 1835, by Dr. John Evans, Robert Clemmer, and Revs. N. L. Thomas and Joseph Miller. Rev. Thomas built the first house in the village, and Isaac Savage the second. At the time of the location of the county seat there, the village contained thirty or forty families, three hotels, three general stores, two blacksmith shops, two tailor shops, and was on a daily stage line, leading from Toledo to Ft. Wayne. Its buildings were mostly built of logs, but have now all rotted away. An old school house was the last to remain to mark the spot of Paulding county's first county seat, but that, too, has now rotted away. No vestige of New Rochester now remains, and wheat and corn are grown upon its once busy streets. From New Rochester the county seat was removed to Charloe, and the county business transferred to that place in 1841. The village was laid out, for the purpose of being a county seat, by Benjamin F. Hollister, and was pleasantly located on a commanding bluff of the Big Auglaize river. It was on the site of an old Indian town and received its name from an Indian chief known as Charloe Peter. Here, at one time, dwelt the chief, Oquanoxa, and about six hundred Indians, a remnant of the once powerful tribe of Ottawas, of which the noted Pontiac was chief. The village was near the center of an Indian reserve, a tract of land four miles square, set off by the general government for the Indians, and known as Oquanoxa's reserve. As the lines of this reserve came in conflict with the section lines, it yet has an effect upon the surveys in that vicinity, inasmuch that many tracts of land within the former reserve and near its borders are fractional. The Indians raised corn upon the large bottoms opposite their village, which are now owned by Hon. John W. Ayres. Just north of the village was their cemetery, many mounds, beneath whose sod sleep the dust of their braves, are yet plainly visible. Silver brooches, tomahawks, pipes, and other Indian trinkets, have from time to time been exhumed from these Indian graves. Charloe, in its prosperous days, contained a neat brick court house, the residences of county officers and other families, a large frame hotel, several store rooms, and a population of four or five hundred. Some of its first settlers were John W. Ayers, G. H. Phillips, John H. and A. J. Taylor, A. H. Palmer, A. S. Latty, and the Hankins and Kingery families. Its location was a beautiful one, its natural scenery, grand and picturesque, but, like New Rochester, when deprived of its county seat honors, its star of prosperity sank beneath the horizon, never to rise again; the marks of decay soon settled upon the doorposts of its dwellings, or as an humble follower of the immortal bard, who, insensed and inspired over the removal of the county seat, was constrained to write:

"When Paulding a shire town was made,
And thither folks began to wade.
Then Charloe's flower began to fade,
And drooped, and died, and away was laid."

The location of Charloe is yet as beautiful as ever, surrounded by green swards and shady groves, but the location is about all that is left. Nearly all of its former buildings have crumbled to dust, and only a few families remain to tell the tale of its pioneer prosperity.

Paulding, the third and present county seat, was laid out by George Marsh, August 10, 1850, the lines being established by Ezra J. Smith, the county surveyor at that time. It is located on the banks of Flat Rock creek, one and a half miles north of the geographical center of the county. By a special act of the legislature the county seat was located there in 1851, and the county business was removed from Charloe in the spring of that year. The site was selected in consequence of its central position, and it may be that the county seat removal from Charloe was somewhat hurried up by the influence of speculative land owners in the vicinity of Paulding. However that may be, all now agree that the county seat is where it should be. Attempts were made to remove it back to Charloe; also to Junction, but they were unsuccessful. At first Paulding was in the very midst of heavy forest, without roads, save a few winding wagon tracks, and almost without communication with the civilized world. The wild deer and bear roamed its uncleared streets; squirrels chattered from its woody housetops, and wolves howled in its thicket-covered alleys. Many of the county officers lived in log cabins, and the first jail was of hewed logs. For nearly thirty years the town made but little advancement, for in 1880 its population was but 483; but since that date it has made rapid strides, stimulated by the building of the Mackinaw railroad and the location of factories within and near its limits. It now has a population of nearly 2,000, has several fine brick blocks, good public buildings, and is fast taking rank as one of the leading county seats of Northwestern Ohio.

County Buildings.—Owing to the short period of time that the county seat remained at New Rochester (a little more than a year), there were no county buildings, erected at that place. The only term of court held there was in a room over Gen. H. N. Curtis' store, and the county offices were located in private buildings. Upon the removal of the seat of justice to Charloe, Mr. B. F. Hollister proceeded to erect a court house, at his own expense, as he had agreed to do in case that the county seat should be located there. The building was a very neat, and, for those days, rather a commodious one, being about 30x40 feet in dimensions, and two stories in height. It was erected of brick on a good, solid stone foundation, at a cost of $10,000. On the lower story there were six rooms, three on each side of a hall extending east and west through the building, used for the county offices. The court room was on the second floor, and was richly finished in black walnut and furnished with the same material. The house was presented to the commissioners on the condition that it should be the property of the county as long as the county seat remained at Charloe, after which it should revert to the original owner, or to his heirs. When the county affairs were removed to Paulding, Mr. Hollister being dead, the building fell to his legal heirs but they were already wealthy, and perhaps looking upon the vacated court house as a useless piece of property, never paid any attention to it. The building became everybody's building and nobody's building, the court room for a number of years was used for schools, church, elections, balls and for public gatherings of all kinds. The offices were used for residences by anyone who might choose to occupy them. A few years ago the county commissioners claimed the right (and perhaps legally), to dispose of it, and offered to sell it to Brown township, to be fitted up as a public school building. A committee was appointed to inspect it who did so, and reported that its decayed condition would not warrant a purchase. A new school-house was built and the old court house was left to be only the habitation of owls and bats. Year by year is is more rapidly hastening to decay. Its roof has fallen in, its stairway has tumbled down, and ere another decade shall have passed away a mouldering pile of brick dust will be all that remains to mark the site of Paulding county's first court house.

"Ah, sad indeed, old house, hast been thy lot,
In thine old age uncared for and forgot;
To silent dust thou'rt crumbling unbemoaned,
And sadder yet, by old-time friends disowned.

For many years thou wast fair Charloe's pride,
And little dreamed of ills that now betide;
Within thy walls hast stood full many a pioneer.
Is there none now to drop for thee a tear?

Yes, one there is, who doth thy fate deplore,
An sighs to think how soon thou'lt be no more;
Tis he who sits beneath thy shade to-day,
And with dewy eyes doth trace this simple lay."

Paulding county's second court house was erected in Paulding in 1852, and was a two-story frame with county offices below and court room above. It was an ungainly, ill-proportioned affair, and from the day of its completion had a sort of rickety, tumble-down appearance. Its dimensions were about 30x40 feet, and the court room was reached by an outside stairway erected on the rear. The building was consumed by fire on the evening of January 2, 1868, and but few tears, if any, were shed over its ashes. Some valuable documents, however, were destroyed. It was located on Main street near the northeast corner of Courtyard square. Upon its site was soon after erected the county's third court house. This was a one story frame 30x40 feet in size, and contained only court room and two small jury rooms. The contractor of this building was Francis Reiniche, who did the job complete for $2,000. The house was a decided improvement over its "illustrious predecessor," and did good service until superseded by a new one in 1888. It was then sold to M. D. Mann, Esq., for $500, who removed it to a location on Jackson street, and fitted it up as an opera house. As this building was for court purposes only, a long one-story brick building was erected south of the court house, and fronting on Main street, in which were located the county offices. Much of the brick for these offices were furnished by Dr. D. W. Hixson, and were conveyed to Tate's landing by canal, from thence to Paulding by wagons, and as the roads were at that time almost impassable, the cost of getting the material on the ground was exceedingly high, and, it is said, the contractor lost much money on the job. These offices were termed the "brick row," and for a time filled the purpose for which they were erected, but in a few years became so dilapidated that they illy served as a store house for the public documents, and as places in which to transact the county business. In some parts the brick had so crumbled away that there were holes entirely through the wall, and other portions had to be propped with timbers to keep the walls from tumbling down. So insecure became the building that it was condemned by the public generally, and it became necessary for the county commissioners to do the same. Certain it was that some place for keeping the county records and transacting the county business must be prepared, and it was thought better and cheaper in the end to build a new court house out and out, than to attempt to patch up the old county buildings, and that the conclusion was a wise one is now conceded by all. Accordingly, in January, 1886, the first steps for the erection of the new court house were taken, by the circulation throughout the county of the following petition:

"To the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

We, the undersigned resident taxpayers and voters of Paulding county, State of Ohio, respectfully represent that public necessity requires the building of a court house, in and for said county, with suitable county offices. We ask, therefore, that your honorable body may enact such legislation as may be necessary, authorizing and requiring the commissioners of said county to issue bonds in the sum of $40,000, and build for said county, forthwith, a court house, to cost $40,000."

In accordance with the above petition, Hon. John L. Geyer, then representative from the Paulding-Defiance district, prepared and presented the following bill, which, after the usual routine, passed both houses and became a law some time in April, 1886.

HOUSE BILL NO. 280.

Sixty-seventh General Assembly, Regular Session, Entitled a bill to authorize and require the Board of County Commissioners of the county of Paulding to issue bonds to build a court house.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, that the county commissioners of Paulding county are hereby authorized and required to construct a court house in the center of the grounds now occupied by said county with old court house and county offices, in the county seat of said county. Plans and specifications for said building shall be determined upon, and the contract let according to law, within six months after the passage of this act, which contract shall require said building to be completed as soon as practicable, and at a cost not to exceed forty thousand dollars.

SECTION 2. That the commissioners of said county, for the purpose of building said court house, are hereby authorized and required to borrow such sums of money, not exceeding forty thousand dollars, as they shall deem necessary, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and issue the bonds of the county therefor. The payment of the principal of said bonds shall not be deferred beyond a period of twenty years, and shall be payable at the pleasure of the commissioners after five years. The interest of said bonds shall be payable semi-annually, and said bonds are not to be sold for less than their par value.

SECTION 3. The bonds so issued shall be signed by said commissioners and attested by county auditor of said county, who shall keep a record of all bonds issued (with coupons attached), in such sums not less than one thousand dollars, and not more than one thousand dollars each, payable to bearer at such place as the county commissioners may designate in said bonds, and such bonds shall specify distinctly the purpose for which they are issued.

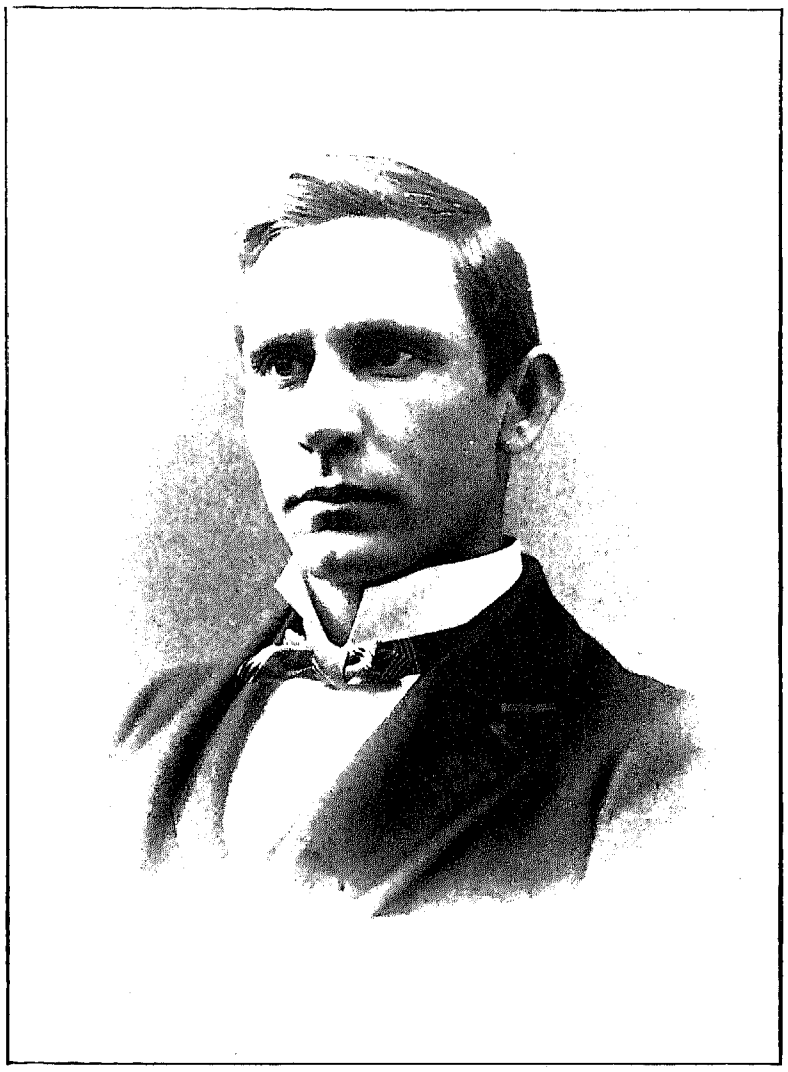

SECTION 4. That said board of commissioners are hereby authorized to levy an annual tax of one mill, or so much as is needed to pay the interest on said bonds, and shall, in addition thereto, levy an annual tax of one mill for the purpose erecting a sinking fund to pay said bonds. The one mill levy for sinking fund purpose to be levied for thirteen years, beginning at such time as said commissioners may determine, and to continue until said bonds are paid.

SECTION 5. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the date of its passage."

Shortly after the passage of the above act the bonds were duly advertised according to law. They were drawn up in sums of $1,000 each, to draw interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, from August 1, 1886, interest payable semi-annually, bonds to become due four at a time each successive year, beginning August 1, 1895. The bonds were sold to W. H. Pennell, of Van Wert, at a premium of $1,000, thus bringing a court house fund of $41,000. A building committee was appointed, who visited several county seats in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, and inspected the court houses therein for the purpose of securing a model, and it was at length determined that the one at Adrian, Lenawee county, Michigan, furnished the best pattern. Having concluded on the style of building, bids were solicited from architects for plans and specifications, which were let to E. O. Fallis, of Toledo, he having presented the lowest bid. The contract of furnishing material and erecting the building in accordance with plans and specifications was awarded August 12, 1886, to Rudolph Ehrhart, of Defiance, he agreeing, by a sealed bid, to do the work for $33,380, that being the lowest bid, by several thousand dollars, of the many that were submitted to the commissioners. Work was commenced on excavating the grounds of the basement shortly after the contract was let, and the corner-stone was laid with imposing ceremony by Paulding Lodge, No. 502, F. & A. M., on December 21, 1886. The event is thus described by an eye-witness: "At 1 o'clock P. M., the Paulding F. & A. M. Lodge met the visiting committee from the south at the depot, formed in procession, and, headed by the Paulding Harmony Band, marched to Literary Hall, where the Grand Lodge of Ohio was opened. The procession then, headed by S. S. Williams, M. W. G. Master, of Newark, Ohio, moved to the court house square, where the ceremonies were performed in a very imposing manner in the presence of a large number of ladies and gentlemen from the town and country. The stone is a parallelopiped of gray granite, three feet in length, and two feet in width and thickness. It occupies a position on the northeast corner of the building, and is inscribed as follows: On the east end, at the top, is engraved the triangular symbol of the square and compass, and the words: 'S. S. Williams, M. W. G. Master;' below these words follow, 'Dedicated by the Paulding Lodge, No. 502, F. & A. M., Dec. 21, A. D. 1886, A. M. 5886.' The north side bears the inscription, 'E. O. Fallis & Co., Architects, Toledo, O. R. Ehrhart, Con., Defiance, O. F. M. Wade, J. V. Sharp, Thos. Chester, Commissioners.' Within the stone was deposited a copper box containing a copy of the Holy Laws, list of the county and village officers, members of the bar, several pieces of coin, list of Paulding school board, silver Masonic square, found by A. C. Hale, on the Franklin pike, Tenn., in 1864; copies of the Paulding Democrat, Paulding Gazette and Antwerp Argus, etc., etc. After the stone was laid, the procession returned to Literary Hall, and the Grand Lodge was closed. Owing to the somewhat poor health of the Grand Master, he did not give a public address, as was intended." The building was accepted by the commissioners May 24, 1888, although at that time a few finishing touches remained to be done, and, to insure the completion of the same, $500 were kept back. The work was soon after finished and the whole amount paid over. The size of the building is 105 feet north and south from the extremes of the brick pillars at the entrances, by 98 feet, similar measurement, east and west, and is erected on what is known as the "four front" plan. Its height from the ground to the highest point of the dome is 163 feet. The basement story is used to store away fuel, and is also the location of the hot air furnaces from which the building is heated throughout by means of pipes; an engine is also located in the basement, which is used to pump water into a 100-barrel cistern, near the roof, from which the building is furnished water. Water is also conveyed from this cistern to the county jail, by means of an underground pipe.

On the first floor are two halls extending entirely across the building-one east and west, the other north and south, and crossing in the center. At the outer extremities of these halls are the four entrances to the building, all of which are similar. In the northwest corner of the first floor is the recorder's office comprising two rooms, a fire-proof vault, and two closets; in the northeast corner is the clerk's office, having the same amount of room as the recorder's office, and the addition of a private stairway leading to the judge's stand in the court room. In the southeast corner are the commissioners' office, and the auditor's public office. The commissioners have only one room. The auditor's public office is supplied with a fire-proof vault and two closets. In the southwest corner is the treasurer's office and vault; also a private office to be used conjointly by the auditor and treasurer.

On the second floor is one hall extending north and south. On the east side of this hall is the court room, about 40x70 feet in length and breadth. Back of the court room in the northeast corner of the building is the judge's private room. South of the court room is the surveyor's office. On the west side of the hall in the southwest corner of the building is the sheriff's office. Immediately north of the sheriff's office is the probate judge's office, and farther down the hall are two rooms for the grand and petit jurors. At the north and south ends of the hall are rooms for witnesses. The garret is used as a store room for unused public documents and records of no special value, yet necessary to be preserved. The committee who had charge of the construction of the building were as follows: The board of county commissioners, consisting of F. M. Wade, J. V. Sharp, and Thomas Chester; Probate Judge W. G. Lee; Clerk T. J. Champion; Sheriff D. W. Parr, and J. B. Zuber, Esq. The grounds about the house are nicely graded up and suitable walks have been laid. In the spring of 1891 shade trees were set throughout the yard. From the peak of the dome extends a flag-staff, thirty feet in length, from which, on notable days, or when the occasion demands, float the American colors. The entire cost of the building may be sum-

Hon. J. L. GEYER.

John L. Geyer is the son of Amos and Emogene Geyer (Wells) Geyer, natives of Ohio and New York. The former was of German and Irish, and the latter of English descent. Amos Geyer was brought up on a farm, and received a common school education. He reared a family of six children, four sons and two daughters. In early life he was a whig, and later a republican, but in the Tilden campaign changed and voted the democratic ticket, and so voted until his death. Amos Geyer was a Methodist and his wife a Presbyterian. The subject of this sketch, Hon. John L. Geyer, was born in the county of Putnam, Ohio, near the town of Kalida, December 6, 1854, and was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Hicks, of Kalida, October 14, 1875. Three children were born to this union, viz.: Mary Olive, born December 5, 1876; Herbert Spencer, August 7, 1884, and Helen Blanche, November 5, 1888, who died August 9, 1889. At the age of fifteen years Mr. Geyer commenced teaching school in Paulding county, and by this and hard manual labor succeeded in securing sufficient money to attend the National normal university, at Lebanon, Ohio, from which institution he graduated in the scientific course in the summer of 1879. He then returned to Kalida and conducted a normal school until the spring of 1882, when he removed his family to Paulding county, where he has ever since resided. His ability as a civil engineer was such that shortly after his removal to this place he was employed by the commissioners of Paulding, Putnam, Defiance and Van Wert counties, and our excellent ditches and improved roads are monuments to his good judgment and ability in his chosen profession.

In politics Mr. Geyer has been a life-long democrat and has repeatedly been honored by his party, which was not slow to recognize his ability and reward him for his brilliant efforts. In 1885 he was nominated at Paulding, by the democracy of the district, then composed of the counties of Paulding and Defiance, for the general assembly, and was elected by the usual party majority. Although he took an active part in the deliberations of the house, his first important bill was one to secure for his county a new court house, of which it was very much in need. He recognized this fact, and introduced the bill which secured the necessary appropriation without consulting the county commissioners or any other officials, and he is entitled to the thanks of every citizen for the magnificent building which graces the public square of the county seat. Among the many important bills which he introduced and which were passed during his first term, was one which secured an appropriation of a large sum of money with which to drain a great amount of land in the southeastern portion of the county which was swampy and perfectly worthless, but which to-day is fine farming land. Many bills of local importance were also passed for Defiance county, and the first term of John L. Geyer was pronounced a grand success by members of all political parties. Although many things have been mentioned, in connection with 1885 and 1886, which were of much importance to the people, the measure introduced by him in the latter year for the abandonment of the Six Mile reservoir, and its passage by the house, was the greatest victory ever achieved by a member of the Ohio general assembly. It is more than likely that most of the citizens of this county are acquainted with all the facts concerning this matter, but it would probably not tire the reader should mention be made of what is now an immense garden spot in Ohio.

Many years ago, when the canal system of this state was in its infancy and when Paulding county was very new, the state authorities built within her borders and in the townships of Crane and Carryall, an immense reservoir, which was to be used as a feeder to the Wabash and Miami and Erie canals. The reservoir was very beneficial to the canals until the rapid development necessitated a swifter process of transportation, and from that time on the reservoir was of little benefit to any person, and, in fact, was not only a great detriment to the whole county, but was the principal cause of breeding disease in its immediate neighborhood. As we stated before, the bill passed the house but was defeated in the senate by a few timbermen, and the bitter warfare waged by the daily press all over the state. The people of the county knew the reservoir was useful no more, and none knew it better than Mr. Geyer, and being re-nominated and re-elected in 1887 by 1,800 majority (the largest ever given any man in the district), he again introduced the bill for its abandonment, in 1888, and, with the tenacity so characteristic of the man, fought for and secured its passage by both branches of the general assembly, and the city press, which had been against the bill, with hardly an exception, turned squarely around and lauded his ability and fine statesmanship, and declared he would be the leader of the house, and the prediction proved true.

Mr. Geyer, after his second term expired, used all his influence for the nomination of Hon. Frank Knapp, for his former position. Mr. Knapp was elected, but died before he could take his seat. The democratic convention, called to nominate Mr. Knapp's successor, unanimously chose Geyer their candidate, and he was elected by a handsome majority. Among the many important measures introduced and passed, this term, was the "Geyer school-book bill," which gave him a national reputation. In 1891 he was nominated for the office of state senator from this district, which is composed of the counties of Paulding, Williams, Defiance, Van Wert, Allen, Mercer and Auglaize, and was elected by about 18,000 majority. He is one of the most prominent members of the senate, and has been spoken of most favorably for the complimentary vote of his colleagues for United States senator. Mr. Geyer's record is without a blemish, and as the democratic leader of the Ohio general assembly, he is without a peer. He is thoroughly identified with Paulding county, and her people will always retain a warm place in their hearts for the man who has labored so earnestly and unselfishly in their behalf.

The building, for convenience, beauty, and probable durability, is one to which our citizens may point with pride, and its cost of construction is regarded by all strangers who visit Paulding as a marvel of cheapness. The first and only calamity which has yet befallen this new temple of justice occurred on the night of June 20, 1890, when the dome was struck by lightning, took fire, and was injured to the extent of about $500.

The first jail in the county was a small brick one erected in Charloe in 1842. It was not a very substantial building, and its walls have long since fallen down and crumbled away. To the credit of the early settlers of the county be it said that this jail was seldom occupied by evil doers. The second jail was erected on the southeast corner of the court yard in Paulding, shortly after the removal of the county seat to that place. It was built of hewn logs closely fitted together, and the walls were made double on the sides as well as above and below. The doors were of huge plank heavily spiked and riveted together, and some of the cells were lined with heavy plates of sheet iron. But, notwithstanding this apparent security, escapes from the jail were frequent—so frequent, indeed, that a new and more substantial one became necessary. Accordingly, on May 7, 1874, the following notice appeared in Vol. 1, No. 6, of the Paulding Democrat, and was published for six consecutive weeks:

A NEW JAIL.

Notice of the intention of the commissioners of Paulding county, Ohio, to build a new jail.

NOTICE is hereby given to all persons whom it may concern, that at the March session of the county commissioners of Paulding county, Ohio, said commissioners decided in accordance to law under and by virtue of the provisions of a certain act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio, passed April 27, 1859, entitled, 'An act authorizing county commissioners to purchase land for the use of court houses, jails and county infirmaries, and to erect buildings thereon, etc.,' and the acts amendatory thereto, to purchase grounds and erect a new jail in the town of Paulding, Paulding county, Ohio, and that so soon as legal notices are given according to law, and publication thereof complete, they intend to take the necessary steps to advertise for sealed proposals for the erection of the said building, work to commence as soon as said commissioners can make preparation therefor, and that on Friday, the 12th day of June, 1874, at 10 o'clock, A. M., of said day, they will meet at the auditor's office in said county of Paulding, to hear petitions and remonstrances against such proposed improvement.

By order of the county commissioners of Paulding county, Ohio.

V. V. PURSEL, County Auditor.

In due time, after the publishing of the above notice, the contract for building a new jail and sheriff's residence combined was let. As there was no railroad passing through the town at that time, the cost of getting stone and other material on the ground was much greater than at the time of building the court house, and the work progressed rather slowly. The building was not completed until 1876, and at a cost of about $25,000.

The basement is of cut limestone, above which are two stories of brick with stone trimmings. It was constructed on the most modern and improved plans, and is regarded as one of the securest jails and most convenient sheriff's residences in northwestern Ohio. It is located on Williams street, in Paulding, about one-half a square from the southwest corner of the court house yard.

Three miles northeast of Paulding, in Jackson township, is located the county infirmary farm. The first county buildings erected here were of logs and a small frame, but these were superseded, about the year of 1884, by a large and neatly constructed frame, in which reside the county poor; also convenient apartments for the residence of the superintendent and family. The farm consists of 160 acres, about ninety of which are under cultivation. Two frame barns and other necessary outbuildings are on the farm. It is thus shown that, in the way of public buildings, Paulding county is now as well supplied as any of her sister counties, and that her buildings are all comparatively new and substantial; also they have been built in an economizing and careful manner, for which the public servants, who had charge of their construction, deserve the thanks of her citizens. Besides the public buildings the county has many elegant structures in the way of bridges, several of which are of iron. Of these, three are across the Maumee; one about one mile north of Antwerp, in Carryall township; and one at Jackson's ford, and one a mile north of Cecil, in Crane township. All across the Maumee are iron structures. There are three across the Big Auglaize; the one at Junction is of iron, and is the longest and most imposing bridge structure in the county, being about 500 feet in length. At Charloe and Oakwood are wooden bridges spanning the Auglaize. Across the Little Auglaize are two iron bridges—one at old Fort Brown and one at Melrose. Several good bridges span Flat Rock; and, in fact, all of the streams are bridged at the principal crossings. The first bridge across the Auglaize was at Junction. It was a wooden structure, poorly constructed, and soon went to decay. This fact prompted the county commissioners to erect better bridges ever after, even if built at a greater expense.

Official Roll.—The county since its organization has belonged to the tenth, fifth and sixth congressional districts, and has been represented in the national congress by Hons. S. R. Mott, J. M. Ashley, W. D. Hill, Benjamin Le Fever, A. V. Rice, M. M. Boothman and D. D. Donovan.

The following residents of the county have represented it in the state legislature: Hons. John W. Ayres, Calvin L. Noble (deceased), Lewis S. Gordon, John L. Geyer and P. W. Hardesty. The last named served in the senate, the four former as representatives. The county was not entitled to a single representative in the legislature until 1891. Prior to 1870, it was attached to Defiance and Williams counties. At that time, Williams county being entitled to a representative of her own, the district became the Paulding-Defiance district, and so remained until 1891, as above stated.

The first auditor of the county was Andrew Clemmer; then, in the following order, came A. H. Palmer, A. S. Latty, Benjamin L. Wentworth, Richard S. Banks, Isaiah Richards, Valentine V. Pursel, William C. Means, Charles Hakes, Robert S. Murphy, Ralph D. Webster and Ephraim Ridenour.

Ezra J. Smith was the first probate judge elected in the county. The office has since been filled by Fielding S. Cable (died in office), Lewis S. Gordon (by appointment), David C. Carey, Calvin L. Noble, B. L. Wentworth, Warren G. Lee, H. S. Spring (by appointment), Vance Brodnix and Lafayette Lewis.

The first two sheriffs of the county received the office by appointments. They were Andrew J. Smith and Ephraim Burwell. The first elected sheriff was Matthew Flemming; then came William K. Daggett, Thomas C. Banks, John Crosson, Isaiah Richards, Freeborn T. Mellinger, John Brakefield (elected coroner, but to fill a vacancy served four months as sheriff), Andrew P. Meng, Jasper A. Fergerson, Hiram M. Ayres, Samuel J. Tate, David W. Parr, Edward C. Swain (resigned), John J. Clark (by appointment), Harry L. Saylor and Edward Staley.

The first county clerk was Gen. Horatio N. Curtis, and his successors have been Andrew J. Taylor, John Lincoln, James M. Russell, Robert Russell, William T. French, Samuel Means, Dr. D. W. Hixon (by appointment), Orlando A. Russell, Orsin D. Fuller, Joseph B. Cromley, Thomas J. Champion and William B. Jackson.

The county treasurers have been William Gordon, Richard S. Banks, James M. Russell, Ezra J. Smith, Isaiah Richards, Lewis Gordon, Peter Hilty, Frederick Young, Samuel G. Robertson, Andrew J. Stenger, Michael Finan, Henry Hyman and Michael Finan.

The first county recorder was H. N. Curtis, and afterward came Andrew J. Taylor, H. A. Shaffer, A. P. Seely, William T. French, Lewis S. Gordon, Isaiah Richards, Charles Hakes, Frank M. Bashore and John Yager.

The first prosecuting attorney was Edwin Phelps (appointed pro tem. by the court), John W. Ayres, John S. Snook, D. N. Osborn (by appointment), A. H. Selden, Thomas B. Holland, Medary D. Mann, Lewis S. Platter, Wilson H. Snook and W. F. Corbett.

The surveyors have been: Ezra J. Smith, Noah Ely, Henry A. Brown, Russell T. Cushman, Frederick W. Bashore, Thomas B. Harris, Henry B. Kretzinger, T. H. B. Bashore, Oliver Morrow and W. J. Johnson.

The first board of commissioners was Christian Shroufe, John Kingery and Thomas Banks, and the following persons have held the office since that time: Thomas Wentworth, John Mason, Sr., John Musselman, John Stair, Samuel Forder, Hubert Naveau, Sr., Henry Oswalt, John Hardesty, George W. Morris (by appointment), L. M. Barnes, Alonzo H. Selden, Theodore G. Merchant, Coe Gordon, John D. Carlton, Alexander Brown, Wilson N. Snook, Joseph Bowyer (died in office), Thomas Chester, Francis M. Wade, J. V. Sharp, George Gusler, George W. Sowers, Martin N. Utley, Daniel Davidson, Michael Maloy and John Powers.

As coroners the following have served: Jacob Switzer, John Brakefield, Dr. B. B. Woodcock, John Hardesty, Dr. Thomas Carpenter, Dr. P. Alvin Dix, Dr. D. W. Hixson, Dr. J. L. Slager and Dr. John Hosford.

The infirmary directors have been as follows: Daniel Kaufman, Darius Leeth, Henry C. Boyland, James Powers, W. R. Crawford, Samuel Craven, Henry Downhower, J. C. Dunlap, Samuel Dotterer and Peter Kimler.

The above may be said to have been some of the representative men of the county, and several of them are still residents within its limits; but many of them are dead, while others, swept by the tide of emigration, have found homes in different parts of the "Far West."

County Finances.—Owing to many of the financial records of the county having been burned at the court house fire of 1868, it is impossible to give a perfect and complete synopsis of the finances of the county from the time of its organization to the present. The earliest record that the writer has been able to find is a report of the county treasurer and auditor, published in the Paulding Eagle, October 7, 1858. A verbatim copy is as follows:

Report of the county treasurer and county auditor of Paulding county, Ohio, showing the amount of funds in the treasury of said county, on the 7th day of September, 1858, to wit:

State fund, $64 28.2; interest fund, $759; County poor fund, $200 11.7; building fund, $157 05.5; infirmary fund, $249 91.6; three per cent. fund, $37 44.0; cemetery fund, 13.6; road fund, $300 38.9; township poor fund, 11.3; township fund, including township orders on Jackson township, $18 44.7; school fund, $33 17.9; school house fund, $3 02.5. Total, $1,164 16.8.

We do certify the foregoing is a full, true and correct statement of the funds now in the treasury of said county, and that it is the full amount due from the treasurer, as shown by the books of the county auditor.

J. M. RUSSELL, Treasurer.
B. L. WENTWORTH, Auditor.

Thirty years after the above report was made a similar report was published by the county commissioners, which, when compared with the report of 1858, will show to the reader the amount of gain in collections made in those three decades; also the large increase made in the financial business of the county in that length of time. The report of 1888 is as follows: The valuation of all property, personal and real, upon the tax duplicate of Paulding county, Ohio, for taxation for the year of 1888, as reported by the county auditor, amounted to three millions, four hundred and ninety-six thousand, six hundred and ninety-one dollars ($3,496,691), upon which valuation the board made the following levy of taxes upon each dollar, for the several county purposes, to wit: General county purposes (expense), 3.5 mills; bridge, 1.5 mills; building, 2.2 mills; interest on county bonds, 2 mills; poor, .8 mills; improved road repair, .7 mills; general county ditch, .5 mills; bonded debt, 2 mills; indigent soldiers' relief, .3 mills. Total levies for county purposes, 13.5 mills. The total net collections on the duplicate from the above levies, including delinquencies of former years collected, amounted to $44,116.70, which was distributed among the several funds as follows: General expense fund, $11,657.34; bridge fund, $4,954.08; building fund, $6,122.70; interest on county bonds fund, $6,661.34; poor fund, $2,110.86; improved road repair fund, $2,331.46; bonded debt fund, $7,-114.38; indigent soldiers' relief fund, $990.20. Total, $44,116.70.

In addition to above collections by levy on grand duplicate, the several funds were credited with amounts as follows from miscellaneous sources: County expense fund, $1,742.64; poor fund, $2,047.68; institute fund, $139.00; excess of taxes fund, $27.15; sheep fund, $926.00; building fund, $51.35; receipts from sale of bonds on McClure road improvement, $4,507.00; on Dorman road improvement, $3,009.00; on Wiseley road improvement, $4,507.00; Six Mile Creek ditch, $4,507.00; Barber ditch, $6,009.00; grand total of receipts from all sources, except special ditch and road assessments, $74,589.62. A collection similar to the above made in 1890 amounted to $110,653.29.

The total value of all taxable personal property in the county, as returned the township assessors in 1891, was $1,472,604.

A return of the state board of equalization for the decennial land appraisement of 1890, has not as yet been made; but it is thought that the appraised value will be about $20.00 per acre, which would give a real estate value in the county of $5,184,700; or a total of all taxable property, both real and personal, for 1891, of $6,757,304.

Owing to the extensive public improvements, such as erecting new court house, building improved roads, constructing bridges and county ditches, etc., within the past few years, the county has incurred a bonded debt estimated in round numbers at about $100,000. As these bonds issued have been sold on long time at a low rate of interest, no inconvenience is anticipated in meeting them when due. Taking it all and all, the county may be said to be in a fair financial condition.

CHAPTER VI.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY.

UNTIL within the past few years, and it may be said that even yet, the extensive forest products of Paulding county have furnished its chief source of wealth. The first manufacturing industry that may be mentioned was the making of staves, railroad ties, and the chopping of cord wood by the pioneers. This industry began on the opening of the canals through the county. The staves were made of white oak, burr oak and red oak timber. The timber was sawed with a crosscut saw, the power being furnished by the muscle of the workmen, split into bolts with a maul and wedge, and riven into staves by means of a fro and mallet. Different grades of staves were made, such as flour barrel, tight barrel and hogshead staves, and were of different sizes and grades of timber, bringing prices according to the grade. On the canal bank flour barrels were worth from $3.00 to $4.00 per thousand; tight barrels from $5.00 to $6.00, and hogsheads from $10.00 to $12.00. One thousand flour or tight barrels, or about 500 hogsheads, were regarded as a day's work for two men. In an early day much of this business was carried on in close proximity to the canals, so that the staves could be easily hauled to the banks ready for shipment. The boats stopped and loaded them wherever a pile, even of only a few hundred, had been culled and counted. The pioneers were not particular as to whose land it was upon which the staves were made, and frequently the most extensive manufacturers were persons who did not own a foot of land. They did not regard it as stealing, but took the choicest oaks by the "right of discovery" from government and speculators' lands, and piously said grace over the luscious viands purchased with the proceeds of their sale. Whether this was right or wrong is a question too fine in moral ethics for the writer to decide. He only knows that it was a pioneer custom, and that the timber of many a "back forty" was partly cleared away by the stave making process. Many thousands of hoop-poles were also taken in the same manner and annually shipped away, yielding a profitable employment both to the cutter and shipper. The shelves of many a pioneer merchant's store room have been replenished from the proceeds of a boat load of hoop-poles shipped to Dayton or Cincinnati, said poles having been gleaned from the forest at large by some enterprising backwoodsman who received the price for them with no compunctious throb, and conscientiously believed that he was engaged in a legitimate business.

From the hoop-pole and hand-made stave era, the county emerged into the ship timber period. This business was introduced into several of the timber growing counties of northwestern Ohio, about the year of 1856, and has been conducted with a greater or less magnitude from that time until the present; and none of the counties have furnished more or better timber than that furnished by Paulding county. The ship timber business has mostly been carried on by Canadian capital and workmen from the provinces who were skilled in the business. The woods were scoured for burr oak and white oak timber, which was at first bought in the standing tree for about 2 cents per foot, but gradually increased in price as it became scarce, until in 1889, when from 14 to 18 cents per foot were paid. The trees were cut down, hewed square, hauled to the nearest water and floated to Toledo. Millions of feet have been taken from the county down the canals and Maumee and Auglaize rivers to Defiance, and thence onward to the eastern markets. The cost of rafting from Defiance to Toledo was about $5 per thousand. At Toledo it was loaded into the hulls of lake vessels and taken to Quebec at a cost of about $15 per thousand, each vessel carrying about 20,000 feet. At Quebec it was solidly packed into ocean vessels and shipped to London and Liverpool at a cost of 20 cents a foot. One of the first men to operate in this business in the county was A. Cheesbrough, of Toledo, who secured much of the timber nearest to the canals. Afterward Fred. W. LeSueur and Charles J. Chenevert came from Canada to Defiance, about the year of 1869, and made the latter place the base of their operations in the timber business, and under the management of their sub-contractors stripped Paulding county of much of its forest wealth. Other big timber men were, C. Neelon, of St. Catharines; Kelsey, of Detroit; Stokes, of Windsor, and McArthur Bros., of Toronto. It is estimated that F. W. LeSueur paid out annually for over twenty years $175,000 for timber, or about $3,150,000 in all; Neelon, $160,000 annually since 1870, $3,040,000 in all; Chenevert $50,000 annually since 1867, about $1,100,000 in all. Other timber men have paid about as much more, so that in the aggregate over $15,000,000 have been paid for ship timber in northwestern Ohio, about $1,500,000 of which has been expended in Paulding county. In England this timber was formerly largely used in the building of ships, hence the name—ship timber; but as vessels are now almost entirely built of iron and steel, it now used for other purposes, such as the manufacturing of street cars, furniture, coffins, and other articles requiring first-class timber. The business is now about extinct in the county, as only a few straggling trees, suitable for such timber, yet remain, and they will probably be used for other purposes. The largest stick of ship timber ever gotten out in the county was in the winter of 1865-66, by Johnson & Snook, and was cut in Jackson township, two miles west of Melrose, at which place it was "banked." Its dimensions were three feet square and seventy-five feet in length, containing 675 cubic feet. It was hauled to the canal bank by means of a block and tackle.

The heavy growth of timber in the county which afforded the means of obtaining an abundant supply of charcoal invited the establishment of blast furnaces for smelting the iron ores of Lake Superior. There were at one time two of these in the county. One was known as the Antwerp furnace, and was located on the Maumee river, half a mile east of the village of Antwerp; the other, known as the Paulding furnace, was located one and a half miles south of Cecil, on section 23, Crane township. The ore for both furnaces was transported from Toledo by canal. The Antwerp furnace was operated by the Antwerp Furnace Co., A. Cobb, president, and William Sayles, superintendent. Evans, Rodgers & Co. were the proprietors of the Paulding furnace. These furnaces were built in 1864-5, and for many years furnished employment to hundreds of men, and converted thousands of cords of wood into charcoal. The everage length of run per year was about eight months; and 24 the average amount of iron annually produced by each furnace was 2,600 tons. Both of these furnaces are now extinct, the Antwerp furnace ceasing operations in 1880, and the Paulding furnace about six years later. During the last few years of the Paulding furnace it was named Bertha furnace, owned and operated by Bennett, Graff & Co., with S. Frank Eagle as superintendent.

The county is now basking in the bright sunlight of the elm hoop and stave era. It began about the year of 1880, although much timber had been rafted away to supply the factories of Delphos and Defiance prior to that date. The enterprising gentleman and energetic business man, Maj. A. B. Holcombe, began the elm hoop manufacture in the county, a business in which he had been engaged for some years at Mentor, Ohio, but which was entirely new in the northwestern part of the state. In the autumn of 1880, Mr. Holcombe, in company with his partner, John F. R. Evans, erected a large mill at Paulding, put in the necessary machinery, and commenced cutting and coiling the stately elms. Mr. Evans dying soon after the mill was built, Mr. Holcombe assumed the entire control, and conducted the business alone until 1884, when he formed a partnership with Mr. Paul Weidmann, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The business was a success from the beginning. The capacity of the mill was about 30,000 hoops per day, and the hands employed from eighty to 100. The hoops were shipped to New York, and from thence to different parts of Europe, mostly to Germany. The car-loads were labeled "Ocean Freight" at the factory. In 1886 Mr. Holcombe sold his interest in the business to his partner for $13,000, and forming a partnership with Mr. Trowbridge, of Toledo, under the firm name of Holcombe & Co., purchased about 1,600 acres of timber land lying a short distance northeast of Paulding, erected a large and well arranged factory, put in the best improved machinery, and commenced cutting staves and lumber. This factory formed the nucleus around which has sprung up the enterprising village of Holcombe, now a station on the Mackinaw railroad. About 16,000,000 staves per year are cut at the Holcombe factory, and it is one of the most extensive manufacturing industries in the county. The hoop mill erected by Mr. Holcombe in Paulding was destroyed by fire Sunday morning, July 24, 1887, at a loss of $25,000 to the proprietors, Messrs. Weidmann & Eichling, only $6,800 of which was covered by insurance. The ashes of the burned building were scarcely cold until the rubbish was cleared away and a new building—a heading factory—was erected upon the grounds. Shortly after this Mr. Weidmann purchased 1,600 or 1,800 acres of land four miles west of Paulding, and in 1889 erected a large stave mill on the same, and is now cutting away the timber into staves and lumber, and converting the lands into farms as soon as cleared. A factory village has sprung up around this factory also, and is known as Section Eight. The Weidmanns (Paul, Sr. and Jr., father and son), reside in Brooklyn, N. Y., and are wealthy manufacturers and dealers in all kinds of cooperage stuff; also proprietors of the Chicago stave factory at Paulding, and the Paulding flouring mills. Their business in Paulding county is looked after by W. H. Vermylie, superintendent.

Antwerp Hub and Spoke Company.—This company was incorporated, under the laws of Ohio, on February 11, 1873. Under its charter, it embarked immediately in the manufacture of hubs, spokes and wagon material. Its first board of directors were Willoughby H. Doering, Lewis S. Gordon, Phaon P. Doering, Harry H. Gordon, John S. Hill and Henry Harris; and its first officers were: president and superintendent, Phaon P. Doering; secretary and treasurer, Lewis S. Gordon. On January 10, 1874, the following officers were chosen: president, Henry Harris; superintendent, Phaon P. Doering; secretary and treasurer, Lewis S. Gordon, and said parties have held said offices continuously to the present date. The authorized capital stock of the company was $25,000, of which amount $18,000, only, were ever issued, and said stock is now owned and held exclusively by the original stockholders. The company confined its efforts to the manufacture of hubs, spokes and lumber until the spring of 1878, when it added to its production the manufacture of slack barrel and keg staves, rough and dressed lumber, moldings, etc., adding a complete equipment of planing and molding machinery. Early in its career the company purchased over 1,000 acres of heavily timbered lands, in convenient proximity to its factory, and in 1882 constructed a tramway railroad to its lands, which has enabled it to move timber cheaply to its factory, and this supply, supplemented with local delivery from other sources, has enabled the company to run continuously for about ten months in each year since its organization. As the timber has disappeared the lands have been cleared and improved for cultivation. The business has been prosperous and well managed, and, while the timber supply is fast decreasing, a vast amount of timber and lumber is still handled here. As an index to current business it may be proper to state that during the year 1890 over 8,000,000 keg staves and 1,000,000 feet of lumber were shipped, and the demand for finished lumber, moldings, brackets, etc., for neighborhood supply, was very large. Over 120 carloads of lumber and staves were shipped during the year. The company employ an average of fifty men and boys, and its pay roll for labor and salaries alone amounts to $15,000 per year. The amount disbursed in the immediate community of Antwerp amounts to about $30,000 per year. With the disappearance of timber in Paulding county is being developed the finest agricultural area in Ohio, and the wealth of oleaginous fluid underlying Antwerp and vicinity, awaiting only the derrick and the drill, will in the near future give the vicinity due prominence.

In addition to the above named factories there are extensive stave works at Latty, Cecil, Hedges, Broughton, Payne, Briceton, Melrose and other places in the county, all of which are duly mentioned in the village or township history of this work. The largest hoop mill in the county at present is that of Jacob Saylor & Sons, at Antwerp. John Leeson, at Scott, and Edwin Bell & Sons, at Hedges, formerly manufactured hoops. It is estimated that there are now over 100,000,000 staves and headings annually manufactured in the county and shipped to all parts of the world. What a contrast is this with the few boat loads that were formerly riven out by the hand of the pioneer, and the "flours" shipped to Dayton or Cincinnati, and the tight barrels to Burkehead & Co., at Toledo. Truly, Paulding county has been mounted upon the car of progression, her natural resources are being developed and the sweet hum of prosperity is heard throughout her borders. That such is so is largely due to her enterprising manufacturers. Side by side, and keeping pace with the manufacturers, are the farmers, the worthy followers of Cincinnatus. Land that last year was growing timber for the factory is the next year growing corn or wheat or some other cereal. Annually is the business of husbandry making more rapid strides, and when the forest wealth has been swept away, and the busy wheels of the factory have ceased to turn, then will Paulding be an agricultural county, and, owing to her great fertility of soil, one of the richest in the state. The area of the county as returned by the state board of equalization is 259,235 acres. Of this area in 1870 only 21,443 acres were under cultivation; in 1880 there were 47,199 acres; and in 1890 about 90,000 acres were arable or plow land, and about 10,000 acres pasture land; leaving a remainder of 154,235 acres of wood land for the factories yet to draw from. In the point of commercial importance Paulding county has ever and does yet take a front rank with any of her sister counties. Her first cargo of exports, it is said, was twenty-five raccoon skins, eight deer pelts, ten pounds of dried ginseng, and a pair of venison hams, loaded into a canoe by a squatter at some point in the northern part of Emerald township, and shipped down the Maumee to Defiance. The commercial value of this pioneer argosy was perhaps $25 or $30, which may seem exceedingly small to the present lumber princes of the county; but to that squatter it no doubt seemed large, as the returns represented a year's income, and from it must be furnished a year's necessaries for himself and family.

The first commercial channels of the county were the Maumee and Auglaize rivers. Down these streams were marketed, in pirogues and "slap-togethers," the surplus grain and other salable commodities of the pioneer farmer. Next came the canals—the Wabash & Erie and the Miami; and, lastly, the Wabash, Nickel Plate, and Mackinaw railroads. The first exports of the county were furs, peltry, dried venison, bear's oil, etc., followed by hand-made staves, hoop-poles, cat-tails, ship timber and the finer grades of lumber—such as black walnut and poplar—and some stone from the Doyle and Noble quarries. For many years the rearing of stock—hogs and cattle--upon the acorns and pasturage of the forrest wilds was an important industry. The stock was generally purchased in the autumn by drovers and driven away to the older counties of the state to be corn-fed and fitted for the eastern markets. The present exports of the county are agricultural products, live stock, staves, heading, hoops, pail staves, hubs and spokes, railroad ties, lumber and timber. By the above industrial review it will be seen that the leading industries of the country are agricultural and manufacturing, and that both are receiving marked attention by an industrious and prosperous people. In speaking of the rapid growth and development of the county, the Toledo Daily Bee of May 29, 1891, says: "The census figures, which state that during the last decade Paulding county has increased more rapidly in population than any other county in the state, must be as gratifying to its citizens as they are surprising to some other people. But not only in population has Paulding made rapid strides. The most marvelous improvements have been made in lands and roads, and the unpromising swamps of a few years ago have been transformed by industry into a garden."

CHAPTER VII.

CANALS AND RAILROADS.

THE building of the Wabash & Erie and Miami extension canals through the county was looked upon as being one of the most important events of the pioneer days. For many years they were the great commercial thoroughfares of the county, and did much toward its early development. Regarding their construction the following is taken from Hardesty's history of the county, published in 1881:

"As early as 1816 the necessity of connecting the waters of Lake Erie with those of the Ohio river, by means of a navigable canal, was assented to, and a correspondence upon that subject was had between Hon. Ethan Allen Brown, of Cincinnati, and DeWitt Clinton, then canal commissioner of the state of New York. An act of the Ohio legislature was passed in February, 1820, authorizing the appointment of three commissioners to locate such a canal. The act also proposed to ask of the general government a grant of one or two million acres of land, the proceeds of which were to be applied to the construction of the canal. For some reason the commissioners were not appointed and no survey was made. In 1821-22, the subject of canals was again revived in the Ohio legislature, and on the 31st of January, 1822, a bill was passed authorizing an examination into the practicability of constructing a canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio river. Seven commissioners were chosen for that purpose, and competent engineers were appointed to make surveys, examinations and estimates. Four routes were taken into consideration. The first from the Ohio river at Cincinnati to the Maumee river, and from thence to the lake; the second from Sandusky Bay to some point on the Ohio; the third to Traverse, up the Cuyahoga river, and then cross to the navigable waters of the Muskingum, thence down that stream to the Ohio; the fourth route was by way of the Grand and Mahoning rivers. The Cuyahoga and Muskingum river route won the prize, and the Ohio and Erie canal was constructed thereon. In 1824, however, a survey was made of the Miami and Maumee river route, and an estimate of the probable cost of constructing a canal upon it was reported to the Ohio legislature at its session of 1824-5.

"M. T. Williams, a member of the state board of canal commissioners, directed this survey. Samuel Forrer was the chief engineer, assisted by J. L. Williams, Francis Cleveland and Richard Howe. A great portion of the survey was through an unbroken wilderness. From where the town of St. Mary's now stands to Auglaize river, a distance of about forty miles, no signs of civilization were visible. On the banks of the Auglaize a squatter, named Thomas McClish, had made a small improvement. Here the party had an encampment, and also at Oquanoxa's town, an Indian village, which stood upon the present site of Charloe. The surveying of the Wabash and Erie canal was commenced in 1826, but not finally completed until the autumn of 1828.

"In 1827, congress made a land grant to the state of Indiana, of one-half of the public lands on each side for a distance of five miles, of a proposed canal that would connect Lake Erie with the waters of the Wabash river. The Indiana terminus of the canal, and also of the grant, was at the mouth of the Tippecanoe river, 213 miles from the lake. The canal was constructed to Evansville, Indiana, a distance of about 500 miles from the lake.

"In May, 1828, congress made a similar grant to Ohio, to aid in the construction of the Miami canal from Dayton to the lake; and also in the same act authorized the state of Indiana to convey to Ohio the right to all public lands lying within the limits of that state, upon such terms as might be agreed upon by those states. Accordingly commissioners were chosen from both states—one from each—who met at Zanesville, Ohio, in October, 1829, where Indiana, through her commissioner, agreed to surrender all the lands within the limits of Ohio to the latter named state, on condition that she would construct the canal from the state line to Toledo, and give to the citizens of Indiana all the rights and privileges that were granted to the citizens of Ohio. Although the Miami canal was the first to be surveyed, yet the Indiana people were the first to begin their portion of the work.

"The first ground on the Wabash and Erie was broken at Ft. Wayne in the spring of 1832. The work progressed slowly, and by the middle of 1835 only thirty-two miles had been completed. In 1840 the canal was opened between La Fayette and the east line of Indiana. Ohio was slower than Indiana to appreciate this needed channel of navigation, and Indiana, disappointed at this tardiness, in 1840 sent their chief engineer to Columbus to urge upon the legislature of Ohio the speedy fulfillment of their portion of the canal contract. The Ohio people commenced work immediately, and, in 1843, the final completion of the Wabash & Erie canal took place. The event was celebrated at Fort Wayne on the 4th of July of that year, and was participated in by citizens from both states, who listened to an able oration, delivered upon the occasion, by Gen. Lewis Cass.

"The Miami canal was not completed until 1845. These two canals, of which a brief history has been given, pass through Paulding county; the Wabash and Erie enters the county on the west side and passes through the northern tier of townships; the Miami enters on the south and has a course through the eastern tier of townships. They unite at the village of Junction."

The Indiana portion of the Wabash & Erie canal was entirely abandoned about the year of 1870. This, rendering worthless that portion of it between the state line and Junction, was also abandoned by an act of the Ohio state legislature in 1888, further mention of which will be made later on under the head of "Reservoir War." The Miami is yet navigable through the county and is in a tolerable state of repairs. That these canals have been of great benefit to the county cannot be gainsaid or questioned. When in full operation they were the great navigable lines between Toledo and Evansville, a distance of over 500 miles; and between Toledo and Cincinnati, a distance of 242 miles. Upon them was conveyed—as freight—grain, lumber and every other commercial commodity. A daily line of packets was established for the conveyance of passengers and the United States mail. These packets were drawn by three horses, driven on a brisk trot, and changed at relays ten miles apart. The schedule time to be made was six miles an hour. Doyle & Dickey were the proprietors of the best line of packets ever established upon these canals. Junction was then the place of transfer for the southern and western branches of the line. Once at that place, while the Wabash packet was waiting for the one from the south, its horses were all stolen, while the driver was regaling himself in a neighboring restaurant. After some inconvenience and a short delay a new team was promptly purchased and the swift gliding craft proceeded on its way. The proprietors threatened to prosecute that horse thief for obstructing the United States mail, but he was never caught. The through lines of packets were abandoned about the year of 1852, as the age of steam had at that time gained a firm footing, and railroads afforded a much more rapid transit.

The first railroad built through the county was the Toledo, Wabash & Western, now called the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific. Gen. W. H. Gibson and Gen. James B. Steedman had charge of its construction between Defiance and Ft. Wayne. It passes through the northern part for a distance of eighteen miles, and was completed in 1855. The construction of the road, at this comparatively early date, is mainly due to the untiring energy of some of the enterprising citizens of Defiance, as is told by the late lamented Hon. W. C. Holgate, of that city, in a historical address before a meeting of the Maumee Valley Pioneer association, and published in the Defiance Democrat, February 28, 1878. He says: "Prior to 1842, the chief mode of travel was on foot or on horseback, and the chief means for transporting goods and produce was by pirogues or flatboats on the rivers. Our merchants and those of Ft. Wayne obtained their goods in this way from the mouth of the Maumee, where they were brought in lake boats from Buffalo. About this time the Wabash and Miami canals were constructed. Emanating in a common trunk from Toledo, one passed southwesterly through Ft. Wayne, Lafaytte, and other towns in Indiana, toward Illinois; and the other struck south to Cincinnati. Upon these canals were sumptuous packets, and numerous line boats; and they began to introduce to us the conveniences and comforts of a civilized life, and we became very hopeful that we would soon assume city dimensions. But disappointment came over the spirit of our dreams. Railroads began to stir the people of the country about these days. From the operations of those already completed, it became evident that they were destined ere long to revolutionize matters pertaining to the business of the towns; materially changing the prestige or destroying some, and building up others.

"On completion of the Mad River road, passengers that would otherwise have taken the packets at Cincinnati and passed through our village to Toledo, took the cars on that road and went to Sandusky. And at the west they would leave the canal, travel twenty and fifty miles out of a direct line north to the Michigan Southern to get to Toledo, rather than ride over the canal through our place. But a blow came nearer home; the Pittsburgh & Ft. Wayne road was put in operation, and the people of Ft. Wayne, who had been our nearest and most intimate neighbors, became lost to us, and we have seen no more of them to this day. But this was not all; it passed only thirty miles to the south of us, draining and carrying away a country that had been tributary to us. But a severer blow than this became impending. First the 'Junction road' loomed up, its place soon to be taken by the 'Air Line,' with a power behind equal to the occasion, and this was to cut our hitherto tributary territory within the limits of fifteen miles at the north. Already the cars were running on this to Wauseon, and then to Stryker, and our liverymen began running a line of carriages to and fro, to enable our citizens to get to Toledo in that way. Already our leading business men began to cast about and talk of removing to Wauseon, Stryker or Bryan. Had we not secured a railroad, and that speedily at this juncture, our doom as a town would have been sealed. We might have retained a rickety school house, a blacksmith shop, and a 'meetin' house' for all denominations, but this would have been the extent of our town capacity. 'Tis true, the securing of the Wabash road did not bring back to us our tributary territory, and so assure to us city proportions; but it put us in a position to become a respectable village, and with the advantages of our canal, made us, as we had hitherto been, the most desirable locality in these northwestern counties away from the lakes for trade and commerce.

"Few appreciate the really hard efforts and work that was done about the years of 1851-2 by some of the citizens of Defiance to galvanize, as it were, into being a railroad that would save the town from impending death. As her committee appointed for railroad purposes cast their eyes around, they could see no spark in the horizon, or any place, 'so big as a man's hand,' giving any prospects or hopes. Mr. T. D. Phillips, one of the proprietors of the town, a practical man of business, who had much experience in such matters about Dayton, where he lived, on coming forth from one of the 'committee meetings,' with downcast looks, says, 'Gentlemen, I don't see any chance for you.' But the desperate condition the town was now in aroused some on the committee, as, perhaps, they had been only once before, and late at night, and early in the morning, they worked, and worked, and worked on. Every railroad man and interest east as far as Buffalo, south as far as Cincinnati, and west as far as Lafayette, was corresponded with—and that correspondence would now fill a volume. Every railroad meeting within those limits was attended, and in vivid colors in our newspapers was depicted the advantages of routes through Defiance. * * * * Suffice it here to say the labors of that 'old committee' resulted in the construction of a railroad from Toledo running southwesterly through Defiance to the state of Illinois. The securing of this Wabash road saved Defiance, and that was all."

While the road saved Defiance, as Mr. Holgate has said, it also had its beneficial results upon Paulding county, opening for its first railroad communication with the great commercial centers of the country, east and west. It passes through the townships of Emerald, Crane, Carryall, and Harrison, and has an assessed value in the county of $266,563, annually paying into the treasury a tax of over $6,000. The second railroad completed in the county was the Paulding & Cecil road, extending between those two points, a distance of seven miles. Its struggles were manifold and its "ups and downs" numerous. The nucleus upon which the road was built was a strap iron track extending two miles south from the Paulding furnace, and used by the company in hauling wood for the kilns. About the year of 1877, George W. Potter, of Paulding, purchased of S. M. Doyle the material of a small narrow gauge railroad, which had been in operation between Columbus and North Columbus; and removed it to Paulding county. With this material he proceeded to construct a railroad from Cecil to a point about one-half a mile's distance from Paulding. It was a rickety affair, and it is thought that the proprietor never realized much profit upon the amount he invested in building it. In 1879 John F. R. Evans, with the aid of citizens of Paulding and Cecil, began the construction of a standard gauge road between those points, which, being completed, the first train ran over it into Paulding September 1, 1880. In 1881 it passed into the hands of the Paulding & Cecil railway company, with S. Frank Eagle as president, and was operated by that company until 1884, when it was sold to the Cincinnati, Van Wert & Michigan railway company, and became a part of what is now the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw road.

A history of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis railroad, or "Nickel Plate," as it is familiarly known, may be thus briefly told: In May, 1854, the citizens of Paulding county were startled by the sudden appearance of a corps of engineers engaged in running a railroad line from Tiffin to Fort Wayne. Shortly after the line was located, contractors began work and the road was cut out and partly graded through the county. In the autumn of the above mentioned year, work was suspended for the winter, with the assurance that it would be resumed the following spring. Spring came, but with it came no orders to begin work on the Tiffin & Fort Wayne railroad, and they never came. The financial embarrassment of the leaders of the enterprise had caused a permanent suspension, and many contractors and employes under them suffered a loss of being unpaid for their labor. In 1872 a new company was formed, a resurvey of the line was made and work vigorously begun. This time it was called the "Continental Railway," and was to be the great double-tracked through thoroughfare between New York city and Omaha. So confident were all that the road would this time be built that villages were located at every available point along the line, store-rooms and warehouses were erected, and corner lots arose to fabulous prices. But a second time were the people interested doomed to disappointment, for, as upon the Tiffin & Fort Wayne, work ceased upon this road never to be resumed, and the magnificent, double-tracked Continental railway passed into innocuous desuetude. For nearly ten years it slept as in the sleep of death, but in 1881 it was resurrected by a modest young railroad man of Lima, now the Hon. Calvin T. Brice, United States senator from Ohio. Its resurrection was brought about as follows:

Mr. Brice, having become largely interested in the Lake Erie & Louisville, and other north and south roads in Ohio, was desirous of obtaining an outlet for his freight to the eastern seaboard, and accordingly held an interview with William H. Vanderbilt, to see if said outlet could not be secured over his lines at better rates than those existing. The great railroad king of New York smiled rather derisively upon the young Ohio man and would offer him no inducements. Mr. Brice turned upon his heel and said: "I will build a competing line," and forthwith work was begun upon the New York, Chicago & St. Louis railroad. It was completed through the county in September, 1881. While work was progressing, the old settler looked blandly on and said: "This 'ere road will never be built." Twice had he been deceived by its fickle promises and false charms, and did not propose to be a third time duped. But the third attempt brought the real charm, and the most obstinate doubter was happily disappointed. When he saw the wheels of the iron horse go whirling by he had to believe. The line through the county is a straight one, and has a one minute deflection from a direct east and west course. It traverses the townships of Brown, Jackson, Paulding and Harrison, a distance of twenty-four miles, and has within that distance nine stations. The assessed value of its main track, side-tracks, rolling stock, etc., in the county, is placed upon the auditor's duplicate at about $200,000, so that it pays into the treasurer's office a good, round sum as taxes. When

Mr. Vanderbilt saw the effect of this "competing line" upon the Lake Shore road, he sought control of it, and it passed into the Vanderbilt system in 1886; Mr. Brice, it is said, clearing a cool $5,000,000 by the deal. So much for the pluck and energy of an Ohio man, who, if he did not belong directly to Paulding county, was born in the adjoining county of Putnam.

As early as 1838 there was talk of building a railroad from Florida to the Straits of Mackinaw, but there was nothing done upon the project more than to point out the benefits which would arise from such a route. Along in the latter part of the "fifties" a survey was made northward from Cincinnati via Greenville, and a road, called the Mackinaw, was partly graded as far north as Van Wert. Work suddenly ceased upon this road, and for more than twenty years nothing was heard of the Mackinaw. In 1880 the citizens of Van Wert, realizing the importance of a north and south road to their town, organized the Cincinnati, Van Wert & Michigan railway company, with John M. C. Marble as president, and began work on a road extending both north and south from that place. The first portion of the road completed was from Van Wert to Shane's Crossing, eight miles south. From this point it slowly but steadily advanced from town to town until it reached Franklin, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad, whence it runs its trains over that road to Cincinnati. This was accomplished in 1887, seven years after the road was begun. The slowness of its construction was from the following cause: The company depended upon local aid to erect the first portions of the road, and then upon the earnings of the portions completed to build the remainder. The road was completed to Paulding in 1884, and by purchasing the Paulding & Cecil road secured an outlet to the Wabash at Cecil. From this point trains were run south until about 1887, when the road was pushed on northward into the state of Michigan. The company was re-organized about this time and the name of the road changed to the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw. The road is very convenient for the citizens of Paulding county, as they can leave Paulding on the early morning trains, arrive at Cincinnati about 10 a. m., have five or six hours in that city, and reach home the same day. It passes through the townships of Blue Creek, Paulding and Crane, a distance of eighteen miles in the county, and is assessed at about $3,000 per mile. Its stations in the county are Scott, Folmer, Dague, Latty, Paulding, Holcombe, Furnace and Cecil. It crosses the Nickel Plate at Latty, and the Wabash at Cecil.

In the winter of 1882, the Ohio legislature passed an act authorizing certain townships along the line of the road to vote a bonded indebtedness for aid in its construction. Among the townships which voted in favor of issuing bonds were Pleasant and Union, in Van Wert county; Dublin, in Mercer county; and Blue Creek, in Paulding county. The bonds were sold and the money applied in building the line to Paulding, When the interest on those bonds became due, the township trustees, acting under legal advice, refused payment. The holders of the bonds then commenced action to enforce collection, and the case drifted along through various courts. Judge Jackson, of the United States circuit court decided in favor of the bondholders. The case was finally settled in January, 1891, by a decision of the United States supreme court declaring the law unconstitutional under which the bonds were issued. About $80,000 of these bonds were negotiated, and that amount, together with the costs of litigation, was lost by those who purchased them.

In the summer of 1888, the American Midland, or Mahoning railroad, was graded through the southern part of the county, parallel to the Nickel Plate, and about four miles south of it. The road then, like some of its predecessors, passed into a quiet sleep from which it was fully awakened in the fall of 1891. Two trunk lines pass through Paulding county east and west; and the Mackinaw, an excellent road, cleaves her center north and south. Upon the prospects of the Mahoning road the villages of Grover Hill and Mandale were located upon its line in the county.

CHAPTER VIII.

MILITARY HISTORY.

"Cease to consult the time, for action calls;
War, dreadful war, approaches to our walls."

THE part taken by Paulding county in the late Civil war is a particularly bright one, and may go upon the pages of this volume as on an escutcheon garnished with glory. With pride will it be cherished in the memories of her citizens, and by them proudly handed down to posterity, even as is being done. When, on that dark April morning, in 1861, the lightning flashed the startling news over the world that Fort Sumter had fallen before the bombs of the rebel Beauregard, it aroused a throb in the pulse of little Paulding which beat in unison with that of the patriotic north; and in a few days a company of her gallant sons had responded to the president's call for 75,000 three months' men. This was company G, of the fourteenth regiment, Ohio volunteer infantry. It was recruited from all parts of the county and rendezvoused at Antwerp about the 22d of April, 1861. Its commissioned officers were: John S. Snook, captain; Alfred M. Russell, first lieutenant; and John Crosson, second lieutenant. A member of the company says: "At Antwerp we were drawn up in line preparatory to being mustered into the United States service. Before being mustered in we were told that all who did not wish to muster with the company might step two paces to the front. Only one man stepped out. * * * * Old Mr. Lewis Ward was there with us blowing the fife. He must have been sixty years old. I never shall forget how badly the old gentleman felt when told that his age prohibited his going with us. Tears rolled down his furrowed cheeks, and his every expression showed how intense was his desire to march to the front with the boys and do battle for his country." The company joined the regiment at Toledo, and with it was sent to Camp Taylor, at Cleveland, where, after a few weeks' drill, it received orders to join McClellan's forces, and go forth to the stern realities of war. The company with its regiment was the first organized force to invade the rebel soil at Parkersburg, Virginia, which it did on the 24th of May, a day made memorable by the death of the gallant young Colonel Ellsworth at Alexandria. The company served in West Virginia, took part in the engagements at Philippi and Carrick's Ford, and was mustered out of service August 13th, having served its term of enlistment.

The first company to be organized in the county under the three years' call was company F of the Thirty-eighth Ohio volunteer infantry. It was recruited, during the summer of 1861, in the eastern part of the county, mostly in Brown township, and when not more than twelve or fifteen men had been enrolled, they met on Saturdays at old Fort Brown —historical ground--for drill. Its election of officers resulted in John H. Adams being chosen captain; John Crosson, first lieutenant, and Elias W Gleason, second lieutenant. Webster Jones, a soldier of the Mexican war, who had been largely instrumental in the recruiting service, was chosen orderly sergeant, and soon after arose to a lieutenancy in the company, and afterward to a captaincy in the regiment. In the latter part of August, the company joined its regiment at Camp Trimble, Defiance, Ohio, and on the 8th day of September started for Camp Dennison, where, after a few weeks spent in drilling, the regiment was ordered to join the forces under Gen. Buell in Kentucky, and spent the winter of 1861-2 in that state, participating in the battle of Mill Spring. The company veteranized with its regiment in 1863, came home on a thirty days' furlough, recruited its depleted ranks, and returning took part in many of the bloody engagements fought by the western army; marched with Sherman to the sea and through the Carolinas, passed in the grand review at Washington city and was mustered out of the service at Louisville, Ky., July 12, 1865. Capt. Adams contracted disease soon after entering the service, came home and died, and was succeeded by Capt. Crosson, who was killed in the terrible charge which the regiment made at the battle of Jonesboro, September 1, 1864. This was the severest engagement in which the company participated during the war, and its loss in killed and wounded numbered nearly one-half of the officers and men engaged in the terrific hand-to-hand struggle. Paris Tucker received eleven wounds, two of them bayonet thrusts, and yet lived many years after the war. Capt. Jones was severely wounded in the face in this battle, but is yet living.

Company G, of the Fourteenth regiment, was at home only about two weeks from the three months' service when it began organizing for the three years' service, the date of enlistment being August 26, 1861. W. H. Eckels was commissioned captain; Crawford C. Adams, first-lieutenant, and Henry B. Fergerson, second-lieutenant. It served again in the "Old Fourteenth," James B. Steedman, commanding. It took part in the campaigns of Kentucky and Tennessee, and at the battle of Chickamauga suffered terrible loss: out of forty-seven men, eight were killed, nineteen wounded, and three taken prisoners; a total of thirty, or more than sixty per cent. The loss of the entire regiment was a one-third greater per cent. than that of the English light brigade in its famous charge at the battle of Balaklava. After the fight at Chickamauga, the company, with the army, fell back to Chattanooga, and after a siege of about two months took part in the celebrated and successful charge on Missionary Ridge. On the 14th of December, 1863, it veteranized and came home on a thirty-days' furlough. After this the company served in the Georgia campaign, and went with Sherman to the sea, across the Carolinas to Raleigh, and was present when the surrender of General Johnston took place. It then marched through Richmond, Va., thence to Washington, D. C., and from there to Louisville, Ky., where it was mustered out, receiving final discharge at Cleveland, Ohio, July 11, 1865. The company served in all from April 22, 1861, to July 11, 1865, a period of four years, two months and nineteen days. The following graphic history of company C, Sixty-eighth Ohio veteran volunteer infantry, is furnished by Captain Patrick H. Mooney, of Antwerp:

"Organized November 25, 1861, with the following officers: Captain, P. H. Mooney; first lieutenant, J. C. Banks; second lieutenant, George W. Kniss, the company mustering 101 men, rank and file. Mustered into service by P. H. Mooney, captain and organizer of said company; attached to the sixty-eighth regiment Ohio veteran volunteer infantry, second brigade, third division, seventeenth army corps, army of the Tennessee. Division commanded by John A. Logan; corps commanded by Brig.-Gen. McPherson, who was killed July 22, 1864, before Atlanta. November 25, 1861, the company went from Antwerp, Ohio, to Camp Latty, at Napoleon, Ohio, the place of rendezvous. January 21, 1862, ordered to Camp Chase, Ohio; February 29, ordered to Fort Donelson, Tenn.; March 7, ordered to Metal Landing, Tenn.; 15th, ordered to Crump's Landing, Tenn.; April 6 and 7, took part in the battle of Shiloh, Tenn.; April 17, ordered to Pittsburg Landing, Tenn.; 29th, to Corinth, Miss.; June 2d, ordered to Bolivar, Tenn., under division commander, Gen. Lew Wallace; June 28, marched to Grand Junction, Tenn., after Jackson's guerrillas; July 25, returned to Bolivar, where we remained constructing fortifications, company C occupying Fort Anaca, until September 22, when we were ordered to Iuka, Miss., via Corinth. This company skirmished with the enemy under Van Dorn and Price with good effect; the enemy being driven out we returned to Bolivar September 26. October 3, 1862, were ordered to Pocahontas, on the Hatchee river, to intercept rebel forces under Van Dorn and Price retreating from Corinth after a sanguinary battle with Gen. Rosecrans. Our forces, including company C, met the retreating enemy at Hatchee river, where a severe battle took place, in which company C took an active part with the regiment, receiving praise for gallant conduct under Gen. ———. We returned to Bolivar, October 7, guarding thirty-six prisoners. This company was on the march through central Mississippi, and was with the regiment during the expedition and siege of Vicksburg; crossed the Mississippi river below Grand Gulf; marched to the battle of Thompson's Hill, Miss., May 1, 1863; met the enemy at Raymond, Miss., and routed him May 15, 1863; thence to Jackson, Miss., May 14; thence to Champion Hill, Miss., May 16, 1863; then crossed the Big Black to the siege of Vicksburg, May 18 to July 4, 1863; battle of Clinton and Jackson, Miss., February 5, 1864, and went to Meridian and burned the town and prison sheds. We were engaged for six successive days as sharpshooters, receiving praise for gallant conduct; was on the expedition under command of Maj. Gen. F. P. Blair, making a tour around by Yazoo City. This company, June 5, 1863, was in the rifle pits as before, and was in the expedition after the fall of Vicksburg under Maj.-Gen. Sherman against Johnson at Jackson, Miss. The company, with the regiment, guarded 554 prisoners into Vicksburg, Miss., where we remained until March 17, 1864, when we got furlough home. Returned to Cairo, Ill., in May, 1864, and marched from Clifton, Tenn., across Alabama, to Big Shanty, Ga., June 9, where a battle ensued; also Kennesaw Mountain and Brush Mountain until June 30, 1864; June 27, Kennesaw Mountain general assault; battle of Nickajack Creek, Ga., July 2-5; Atlanta, (Hood's first sortie) July 22, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., siege of July 28 to September 2, 1864; battle of Jonesboro, Ga., August 31 to September 1, 1864; also Lovejoy Station, Ga., September 2-6, 1864. After the fall of Atlanta went into camp at West Point, near Atlanta. This company marched from Atlanta, Ga., with Sherman to the sea and the siege of Savannah, Ga., December 10-21, 1864. Also battles as follows: Pocotalego, S. C., January 14-16, 1865; Orangeburg, S. C., February 12, 1865; Columbia, S. C., February 16-17, 1865; Cheraw, S. C., March 2-3, 1865; Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865; Goldsboro, N. C., March 21 1865; thence to Richmond, Va., to Washington, D. C., where the company marched in the grand review of the president of the United States, and all the government officials; thence to Louisville, Ky., where the company was mustered out on July 10, 1865, by Cyrus M. Roberts, captain Ohio veteran volunteer infantry."

The following history of company I, One Hundreth Ohio volunteer infantry, was written by a member of the company and published in the Antwerp Argus, July 23, 1891:

Company I, of the One Hundreth regiment, was raised at Antwerp upon the second call for 300,000 men in August, 1862. The company left here about 100 strong, under command of Capt. Kauffman; D. S. Hughes, first lieutenant; J. S. Champion, second lieutenant. Their first rendezvous was at Toledo. From thence they went to Covington, Ky., where they first sighted the "Johnnies." The regiment was a part of the Twenty-third corps commanded by Gen. Schofield, and saw some hard service. Their first regular engagement was at Buzzard's Roost, Ga. At the fight at Eutaw Creek the regiment lost 104 men out of 200 who were engaged. At the battle of Nashville the regiment captured a battery of eight guns after a desperate struggle.

From Nashville the regiment went to Baltimore, and from there to Cape Fear, and were in the hard fights at Wilmington and Goldsboro, N. C.

The principal battles in which the company was engaged were: Knoxville, Columbia, Franklin and Nashville, Tenn.; Buzzard's Roost, Atlanta, Ga.; Raleigh, Wilmington and Eutaw Creek, N. C.

The regiment was mustered out at Greensboro, N. C., June 20, 1865, and received their final discharge at Cleveland, Ohio, July 1, 1865.

Captain Kauffman died at Knoxville in the spring of 1863, and was succeeded by Capt. D. S. Hughes, who had command of the company at the time of its discharge.

Paulding county furnished two companies to the 100-day service of 1864, and as the important part taken by the Ohio 100-day men is looming into especial and merited significance, a brief history of the movement which led to their call into the United States service may not be out of place: Brough was emphatically a war governor, and to him belongs the praise of being the originator of the movement which released so many of the veteran soldiers from guard duty and sent them to the front to swell the armies of Grant. Brough suggested a call of the governors of Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, which resulted in a tender of 85,000 men for a period of 100 days, each state to furnish the following number: Iowa, 10,000; Wisconsin, 5,000; Illinois and Indiana, 20,000 each; and Ohio, 30,000 men. The proposition was forwarded to Washington and immediately accepted by Secretary Stanton. Governor Brough ordered Adjutant General Cowan to issue an order to the commandants of battalions and regiments in the state, calling them into active service. These had been organized really for the defense of the state, and were not in duty bound to respond, but, as the governor had relied upon their patriotism in issuing the call, they responded with alacrity, as he had believed they would. Only one company in the state, company B, Fortieth battalion, refused to be mustered into the United States service, and that company was dishonorably discharged from the service of the state. When the above call was made there was existing in the county a military organization known as the forty-second battalion, Ohio national guard, commanded by Major Andrew P. Meng. The battalion consisted of three companies — A, B and C — and was organized in the spring of 1863. When called into active service the battalion rendezvoused at Antwerp, May 2, 1864, drilled two days and was sent home, with orders to report on the 10th of the same month. Upon the 10th, the members of the battalion all reporting, they were soon on their way to serve the general government. At Toledo it was ascertained that the troop did not consist of three maximum companies, and company C was consolidated with companies A and B. By this arrangement some of the commissioned officers lost their commands, the ranking officers only being retained. With these two companies the battalions proceeded to Columbus, where it was consolidated with the Thirty-second battalion, from Logan county, and one company from Montgomery county, and became companies A and H, of the One Hundred and Thirty-second regiment, Ohio volunteer infantry, and as such was sworn into the service of the United States, Major Meng continuing to hold the same rank in the new organization that he had held in the battalion. The commissioned officers of company A were: John J. Shirley, captain; Fielding S. Cable, first lieutenant; and Peter Snook, second lieutenant. Of company H, the officers were: B. F. H. Hankins, captain; Eli H. Day, first lieutenant; and William Good, second lieutenant.

After a few days spent in drilling at Camp Chase, Colonel Haines was ordered to report with his regiment at Washington, D. C. Accordingly, on the 19th of May, it took up its line of march, and on the 22nd arrived at Washington, going over the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. At Washington it was ordered into camp at Arlington Heights, and remained there until about the first of June, when it boarded the steamer "John Brooks," and was sent to White House Landing, Va., which was then the base of supplies for that portion of Grant's army then in active operations before Richmond. At this place it was attached to the second brigade, second division, of the eighteenth army corps, commanded by General "Baldy" Smith. The base of supplies having been transferred to the south of Richmond, the regiment, on the 13th of June, was sent to Bermuda Hundred, and for the remainder of its term of service did honorable duty in the trenches in front of Petersburg. Its term of enlistment having expired, it was ordered to Camp Chase, Ohio, about the last of August, and was mustered out September 10, 1864. True it is, the term of service of companies A and H, One Hundred and Thirty-second Ohio, was short, but the glory of their achievements will grow in brilliancy the more there is known of them. Besides these six companies, which were organized in the county, many of its citizens enlisted in other regiments of the state, so that at one time during the war scarcely a "corporal's guard" was left in the county. There were two drafts ordered in the county, but this would not have been, had not many of the enlisted men been credited to other counties. Had proper credits been given, there would have been no drafts in the county, as her quotas would have been much more than filled by volunteer enlistments. As proof of this the following instance is given: In Brown township, in the spring of 1865, a draft was pending, and six men wanted, when there were but three able-bodied men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five in the township. What is true of Brown township may also be true of the other townships. Since the war many ex-soldiers of other counties of the state, and of other states, have found homes in the county; and of these none have brighter military records than General S. R. Mott, Colonel Joseph M. Gaston, Major A. B. Holcombe and Colonel Robert S. Murphy. General Mott served as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifty-seventh Ohio volunteer infantry, and was breveted brigadier-general of United States volunteers, for gallant services on the field of battle; Colonel Gaston served four years, one month and seventeen days in the Sixteenth Indiana volunteer infantry, and as colonel of United Veteran Union post at Paulding; Major Holcombe served in a New York regiment, and in 1887 was chosen brigadier-general of the Grand Army of the Republic brigade of the sixth Ohio congressional district; R. S. Murphy served as first lieutenant of company H, Thirtieth Indiana volunteer infantry, and is now a grand army colonel in the county. Francis B. DeWitt, who has the distinguished honor of being the youngest soldier in the rebellion, resides in the county. He enlisted in the fall of 1861, when only about thirteen years old, and served in the One Hundred and Twenty-first Ohio volunteer infantry, until the close of the war, nearly four years. He took part in the battle of Pittsburg Landing, and is the original "Drummer Boy of Shiloh." There are several Grand Army, Union Veterans unions and Sons of Veterans posts in the county; and about one thousand resident veterans. The beautiful and patriotic custom of annually decking soldiers' graves with flowers is tenderly and zealously observed every 30th of May, and the exercises largely participated in by both citizens and ex-soldiers.

Bring flowers the sweetest,
Bring flowers the rarest,
And scatter them o'er our fallen braves;
Bring flowers the brightest,
Bring flowers the fairest,
And strew them profusely on our dead heroes' graves.

The Reservoir War.—The early history of the world is so intermingled with fable, that it is almost impossible to separate truth from falsehood. Many of the wars of the reputed gods were only the productions of some vivid fancy; but not so the reservoir war. It was not merely the creation of the mind but a stern reality, as many living witnesses can testify who saw the grim visages of armed troops quartered in the county for a whole week, in the spring of 1837, to quell what was purported to be a "lawless mob." From time immemorial it has been the custom of all eminent historians who wrote of wars to prelude the actual jingling of arms with the causes which led to the sanguinary conflicts. With no pretense to eminence, yet would our humble pen ask permission to, at least, be permitted to follow in the beaten path of those whose business it has been to rivet burning truths upon the lasting page. At this date, and when the white-winged dove of peace is again hovering over the county, a history of the reservoir war and the causes which led to it may be truthfully and impartially told. In 1826 certain lands in what are now Crane and Carryall townships were set apart, by an act of the Ohio legislature, for the purpose of locating thereon a reservoir, designed to be a feeder of the Wabash & Erie canal, which was then under contemplation of being built, and which was completed in 1843. Work on this reservoir began in 1840 and it was completed about two years later. It was formed by clearing away the timber, throwing up an embankment and cutting off the waters of Six Mile creek, from whence it derived the name of Six Mile reservoir. The embankments inclosed only about 3,600 acres of land, but the cutting off of the creek caused it in time of freshets to overflow its banks, which were shallow, and to spread over many thousand acres west of the reservoir, rendering it impossible to put it in a state of cultivation. It is estimated that about 14,000 or 15,000 acres of fertile land in the county were thus rendered worthless. For many years, and while the canal was in active operation, nothing was said of the devastating features of the reservoir. It was regarded as a public necessity and the citizens acquiesced in the desolation which it wrought. But when Indiana had abandoned her portion of the canal, and when that portion in Ohio between Junction and the state line was no longer navigated except now and then by a solitary wood boat, or a floating boarding house for gangs of timbermen, then an entirely different phase was put upon the reservoir and its desolate surroundings. The citizens of Antwerp—then the most populous village in the county—looked forth and saw, upon the very verge of their southern suburbs, a large, gloomy and impenetrable swamp, made so by a portion of the public works which were no longer a source of revenue to the state, but virtually abandoned by it; and they readily and justly concluded that the time for its legal abandonment had fully arrived.

Accordingly, in the winter of 1886, a petition was gotten up, setting forth in vivid, yet not overdrawn, colors, the grievances brought about by the Six Mile reservoir and its attendant influences, and praying for the abatement of what was now pronounced an eye-sore upon the county and a nuisance to the vicinity in which it was located. The petition received many signers in all parts of the county, and upon being sent to Hon. John L. Geyer, then representative from the county, he prepared a bill for the abandonment of the reservoir, and that portion of the Wabash & Erie canal extending from Junction to the Indiana state line. At this juncture the bill found a formidable and wary foe in the city of Defiance; and for the following reasons: It was a manufacturing city, and the products of its factories were mostly of wood. The vast forests in the vicinity of the reservoir were to them a territory of great wealth, inasmuch as they furnished much of the raw material for the factories; and the canal was a valuable channel, as it afforded excellent means for the transportation of said wealth to their city. What was the Upas to Antwerp and Paulding county was a Golconda to Defiance. It is not to be wondered at then, in a business point of view, that the citizens of that city sent large and influential lobbies to Columbus to oppose the passage of the bill. It was ably championed by Mr. Geyer and passed the house; but in the senate the influence brought to bear by the Defiance lobby was too powerful, and it was defeated in that body, March 9, 1887, by a vote of twenty-six to eight. When the news of the defeat of the bill reached the county, the deep rumblings of rage were heard in the breast of her citizens, and particularly in those residing in Antwerp and vicinity. In the failure of the passage of the bill they considered themselves sorely aggrieved. They felt that by the action of the senate a large, unsightly and miasmatic swamp had been fastened upon the fertile bosom of the county; and it is supposed that about this date the organization of a mysterious body, afterward known as the "Dynamiters," began; and that the avowed purpose of this organization was the destruction of the useless reservoir and canal. The state board of public works, one member of which resided at Defiance, as if in anticipation of that which did happen, placed a few citizen guards, employed by the state, on the banks of the reservoir, and at the locks along the canal, to protect them from invasion. But notwithstanding this precaution, on the night of April 25, 1887, a loud explosion was heard in the vicinity of the reservoir, and on the following morning it was ascertained that the guards had been overpowered (without injury, however, to any of them) by a large force of masked men, and that the bulkhead of the reservoir and three locks on the canal had been blown out, or injured, by dynamite. The startling news flew like lightning throughout the county and state, and the following and similar telegrams were dispatched to Gov. Foraker from Defiance:

Two hundred men marched on the canal in a body, captured the guards and held them in confinement until daylight. They worked all night on the front and rear of the reservoir, cutting the ground enough to let the water out. Then they poured coal oil on the lock and the keeper's house, burning it up. One hundred more men went to Tate's and the other remaining lock, blowing them up with dynamite. No locks remain on the Wabash canal, and mob law reigns supreme. The people of Defiance and Paulding counties call on you to protect the state property.

E. SQUIRE.

Acting upon these telegrams, Gov. Foraker immediately telegraphed Adj.-Gen. Axline to assemble a portion of the state troops and to proceed at once to the scene of conflict; and also issued the following proclamation, copies of which were posted up throughout the county:

STATE OF OHIO, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
COLUMBUS, April 26, 1887.

WHEREAS, It has been reported to me that on the night of the 25th inst. an armed mob of lawless and rioting men drove away from the public works of the state in Paulding county, the guards who were in possession of the same, and with dynamite blew up certain locks of the canal, and with powder and fire destroyed others, and otherwise by cutting the banks of the canal and reservoir, did great damage and injury thereto; and,

WHEREAS, This armed and lawless mob are reported to be still banded together for the purpose of preventing the state authorities from again taking possession and control of the property so wrongfully wrested from them, and threaten by violence to prohibit the repair of the damage so as aforesaid inflicted by them; and,

WHEREAS, The civil authorities of Paulding county appear to be either unable or unwilling to suppress said rioters and protect the authorities of the state in resuming control of the property of the state and making repairs thereof, and appear to be either unable or unwilling to disperse said mob and preserve the public peace,

Now, therefore, I, Joseph B. Foraker, governor of the state of Ohio, do hereby call upon said rioters and evil-disposed persons to desist at once from their unlawful actions and to disperse at once to their homes, and I hereby warn them, failing to do so, they will be immediately compelled to such a course so far as the protection, repair and preservation of the public property of the state is concerned. All persons failing to serve and comply with the commands hereof, will do so at their peril.

In testimony whereof I have herounto subscribed my name and caused to be affixed the great seal of the state, at Columbus, this 26th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1887.

J. B. FORAKER.

By the governor,
J. S. ROBINSON, Secretary of State.

In obedience to the governor, Adjt.-Gen. Axline dispatched the following order to Maj. Bunker, commanding the Sixteenth regiment at Toledo:

COLUMBUS, April 26, 1887.—Assemble about fifty men from sixteenth regiment as soon as possible for duty in Paulding county and await further orders. H. A. AXLINE, Adjutant General.

Maj. Bunker immediately issued the following order to the captains of companies A, C and H:

TOLEDO, April 26, 1887.

Special Order No. 1:
In compliance with the above order, you will forthwith assemble your company at its armory ready for duty.

I. T. MERRILL, Adjutant. H. S. BUNKER, Maj. Com'd'g..

At 8 o'clock p. m., April 26, Gen. Axline, at the head of a force consisting of portions of the Sixteenth regiment, commanded by Maj. H. S. Bunker; and a part of the Fourth battery, First regiment, Ohio national guard, commanded by Capt. O. J. Hopkins, arrived at Cecil, a distance of four miles from the reservoir. Total number of the force was fifty-three enlisted men and nine officers. The infantry was armed with muskets and bayonets and 2,000 rounds of ammunition; the battery was armed with a gatling gun, and 4,500 rounds of ammunition. Headquarters were established at Cecil, and the troops fed at the Mackinaw House, after which a detachment of twenty-eight men, headed by Gen. Axline, moved forward to the reservoir and took possession of the same without firing a gun, or even sighting an enemy. Within twelve hours after receiving orders, Gen. Axline was on the ground with an armed force ready to protect the state property. The next day, April 27, the whole command marched to the front and went into camp at the northeast corner of the reservoir. This camp was appropriately named Camp Dynamite. It was not fortified, but tents were pitched, and the gatling gun placed in position to rake the north and east banks of the reservoir in case of a hostile demonstration by land; or to pour its leaden hail over the bosom of old canal in case of a gunboat attack. Guards were thrown out, picket posts established, and everything in true military style. But no enemy appeared. No attacks were made. All around was as peaceful and quiet as the grave, save the roar of the mighty waters that rushed in torrents through the aperture made in the reservoir bank. Attempts were made by the board of public works to repair it, but they were unsuccessful; and the damage done was never fully repaired. Citizens from all parts of the county, excited by the novelty of an armed body of troops within her borders, flocked in great numbers to see the gatling gun, and mingled on the best of terms with the soldiery, gaily conversing and cracking jokes with the officers and men. Never was an invading body of troops more kindly treated in an enemy's country than was Maj. Bunker's command by the citizens of the county. On the Sabbath that the soldiers were at Camp Dynamite, Rev. J. W. McClusky, of Antwerp, attended the camp and divine services were held. A waggish Antwerper (perhaps a dynamiter), says the words of the text were: "The sword of Foraker be upon us, and the roaring of mighty waters is heard throughout the land, and groans and lamentations riseth up from the city of Defiance; but the reservoir must go." The troops were stationed in the county about one week and were then recalled. The only victim of the war was Fred Reeves, aged nineteen, private in company H. He accidentally shot himself through the head while on guard duty at Cecil an hour or two after the first arrival of the troops at that place. He was killed instantly and his remains were taken to Toledo the following day for burial, escorted by a corporal and two of his comrades. The citizens and soldiers alike mourned the sad and untimely fate of young Reeves.

In about four weeks after the departure of the militia, Governor Foraker visited Antwerp in person. He was kindly received by the citizens, and by them escorted to the late seat of war. He looked upon the dilapidated reservoir and all its desolate surroundings, and in a speech made to the crowd who had assembled to greet him said that he was convinced that the citizens of the county had grievances and that they should receive his immediate attention. A second bill for the abandonment of the reservoir and canal was presented to the Ohio legislature in the winter of 1887-8, and this time was successful. It passed both houses and became a law May 17, 1888. On the following fourth of July the citizens of Antwerp and the county celebrated the event at Antwerp with a grand jollification, in which the troops which had been called out from Toledo heartily participated. The results of the war were that the abandonment of the reservoir was hastened by it, a canal commission of three persons was appointed who sold the state lands which it contained, the channel of Six Mile was again opened, and now large fields of corn and other cereals are grown upon what was a dismal and desolate swamp. The state paid the expenses of the war, and no restitution was made of the property destroyed. The dynamiters! Who they were, from whence they came, or whither they went, is associated with as much mysteriousness as are the pre-historic races. We know that they existed only by the traces of identity which they left behind them. None of them were ever punished. The banner under which they rallied their forces was exhibited at the Antwerp jollification. It was a strip of black bunting, on one side of which was inscribed "No Compromise!" and on the other "The Reservoir Must Go!" Its memory has been perpetuated in the following stanzas:

The shades of night were falling fast,
When through the streets of Antwerp passed,
A gang with banner overhead,
Which bore the legend dire and dread
"No Compromise!"

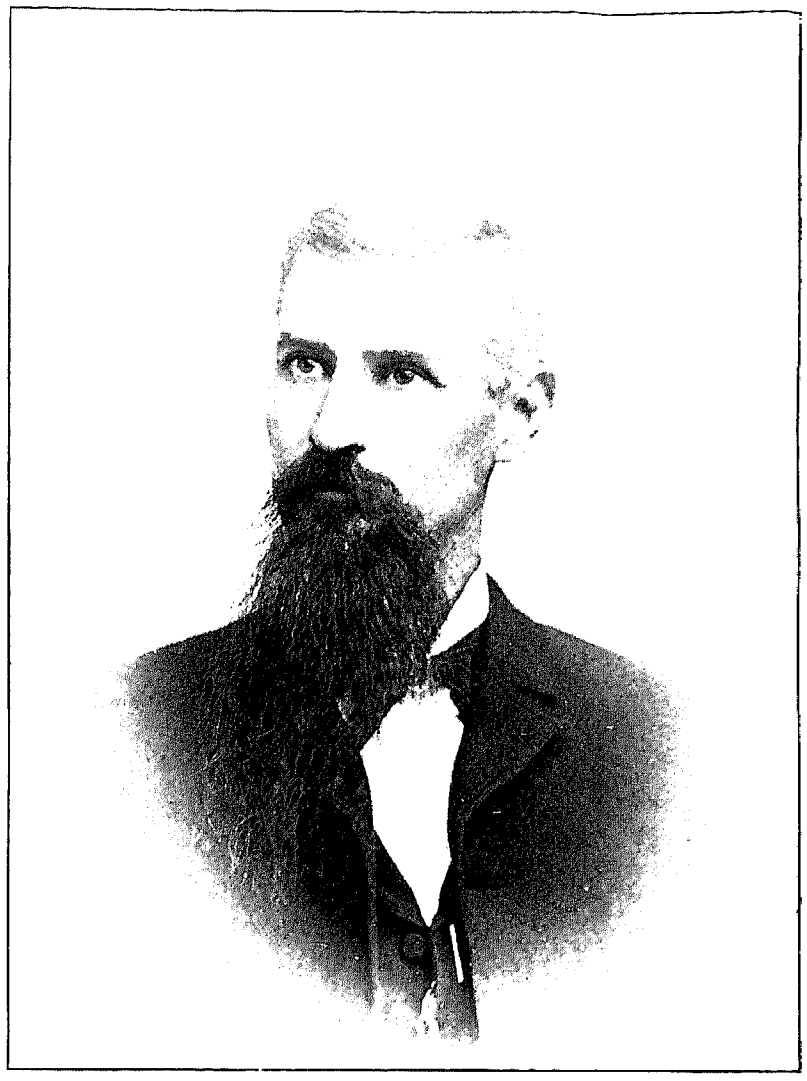

The townsman cry, "Where do you go,
Ye men of measured tread and slow?
Can nothing turn you from your course?"
The answer came in accents hoarse,
"No Compromise!"

"The Reservoir must go," they cry;
"We'll drain it out and run it dry;
We'll blow it up with dynamite,
And all resistance put to flight."
"No Compromise!"

"Our rage can never be beguiled,
We'll raise a tempest fierce and wild
Whose waves shall roll in billows on,
Until the reservoir is gone."
"No Compromise!"

Full swift the dreadful rumor flies,
To where Defiance city lies;
Fierce lightning from an angry sky,
Would fright them less than that wild cry
"No Compromise!"

Her factory wheels will cease to turn,
Her engine fires will cease to burn!
Her people crowd into the street.
With white lips whispering as they meet,
"No Compromise!"

Hon. F. B. DeWITT.

Francis Byron DeWitt was born March 11, 1849. The old stock of DeWitts are of Scotch descent, who came from Holland, to Orange county, New York, long prior to the Revolutionary war. His great-great-grandfather was the sire of nine boys, all of whom became the heads of families. The work of perpetuating the name and replenishing the earth is a family characteristic, which is well known by the family traditions covering a period of over one hundred and fifty years. Charles DeWitt, his grandfather, removed from Orange county, N. Y., to Richland county, this state, in an early period in the history of Ohio, and afterward took up his home on a farm in Delaware county. This farm is now occupied by Francis DeWitt, and has been a family homestead for sixty-two years. F. B. DeWitt says that time has worn the soil, "yet my veneration for the old farm has grown stronger as the years roll by." Francis, his father, was born in Richland county, in 1819, and Sarah McLane, his mother, was born in Pickaway county, in 1821. This couple, still living, have celebrated their golden wedding, and the subject of this sketch is the fourth child of a family of ten children, nine of whom are now living. His early life was passed on the old homestead, where a good opportunity was afforded for plenty of hard work and a country education, so essential to success in life. He spent about four years in academic and collegiate education, making a specialty of the higher mathematics. When asked at college to what class he belonged he invariably replied, to the irregular scientific preps. His profession is such that the details of mathematics have not been called into practical use, yet his faculty for correct mathematical reasoning is made apparent by every turn of his successful career. Let us pass for a moment to his military life. In 1860 he procured an old drum for one dollar in boy's work, in husking corn. He enlisted the friendship of an old Mexican war drummer, who gave him some points in this kind of music. In 1861 he could pound the sheep skin so that the neighborhood boys, who had military ambition, could keep step quite well in their home drill. Seeing others go to war and hearing the stories of camp life and battle field, he was seized with the irrepressible passion for becoming a soldier. He enlisted at the age of twelve, in the Forty-sixth Ohio regiment, and was at the battle of Shiloh. On the campaign to Corinth he acquired a temporary disability, from which, after the fall of Corinth, he was discharged. Remaining out of the service but five weeks he enlisted, in 1862, in the One Hundred and Twenty-first Ohio regiment. He was with his regiment at the battle of Perryville, Ky.; in Rosecranz's campaign through Tennessee, and under Steadman at Chickamagua; his regiment, holding the right wing of the army on that memorable field, achieved a national reputation for maintaining every foot of ground over which it fought, capturing a rebel flag from the Twenty-second Alabama against odds on an open field, firing the last gun in that most terrific conflict, and serving as a rear guard to the great army which withdrew in the direction of Chattanooga. In Bragg's siege of Chattanooga which followed, DeWitt says: That his experience of hunger impresses him yet; how every soldier on short rations coveted the army mule's ear of corn and the musty cracker, which was out of reach and carefully guarded at the commissary, and how we hailed with a soldier's delight the re-inforcements under Sherman and Grant, of the army of the Tennessee from Vicksburg, and the bountiful provisions which they brought. He participated with his regiment in the entire Atlanta campaign, 100 days under fire, and knows by experience of the Savannah campaign in marching through Georgia. In the compaign from Savannah through the Carolinas, while venturing too far in advance of the army with a squad of Sherman's bummers, he unfortunately, after a sharp encounter with a detachment of Wheeler's cavalry, became a prisoner of war, and learned something of Confederate prison life in Salisbury, Danville and Libby prisons; at the latter prison he remained until the close of the war in 1865. All of DeWitt's military life, except while a prisoner, was at the front. Others as young who served so long were in favored positions. The history of this country perhaps does not furnish a parallel of one of such tender years undergoing such long and hard service and retaining such a powerful constitution and robust health as he possesses. He thinks that the front and battle field to him who is shielded in the fortunes of war by the kind hand of providence is the paradise for the soldier.

DeWitt came to Paulding in the spring of 1867, and performed manual labor through the summer and attended school in the winter under Samuel Means, in the old frame school building which stood on the southwest corner of the public square. His collegiate course was between this and 1872. His vacations were spent at hard labor in replenishing his purse, so that the beginning of each school year found him at his desk with limited means, a sun-burned complexion, calloused hands and a strong determination to acquire knowledge. Having read law under T. B. Holland, at Paulding, he was admitted to practice in 1875. He at once built up a good law practice and at all times enjoyed the respect and confidence of the bench and bar. His success in some of the most distinguished criminal cases in the history of the legal jurisprudence of Paulding county, such as the Upthegrove, Plumley and Waterside cases, has earned for him a good reputation as a prudent criminal lawyer, while his ability as a civil lawyer having to his credit success in a long line of important real estate cases passes without question. He was married, in the spring of 1875, to Dell V. Williams, and, as a result of this happy union, is at the head of a family of highly appreciated children: Gail, John S., Eva M. (deceased), William B., Clayton and Florence Bell. Eva May, his second daughter, who departed this life in the summer of 1887, will long be remembered by many in Paulding as a very bright, interesting child. Now residing upon his reservoir farm of about 700 acres in Crane township, he is taking quite an interest in agricultural matters. The product of this farm for 1891, when considering the short time it has been occupied, is almost phenominal.

On July 25, 1891, Mr. DeWitt was nominated, by the republican convention of Paulding county, as the first representative for that county to the Ohio legislature, Paulding county never having a sufficient population heretofore under the constitution to entitle her to a separate representative. Mr. M. N. Utley, a democrat and merchant of Cecil, was his opponent. The county, in 1890, gave a democratic majority of 468. This, although not promising upon its face, was deemed a sufficient fighting chance for one of DeWitt's courage. The campaign, though long and closely contested, resulted, on November 3rd, in DeWitt's election by 343 majority. As Mr. DeWitt is a man of good character, well defined intentions and honest convictions, his friends have no fears but what he will acquit himself with credit to his people, as the first representative of Paulding county.

CHAPTER IX.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS

PAULDING COUNTY is abreast with the times in her educational interests. The general spirit of enterprise manifested in business circles, and the rapid progress in other public improvements, have demanded a corresponding development in the system of education. To this demand the citizens have ably and generously responded. The log cabin of pioneer days, with its puncheon floor, clap-board roof and greased paper for windows, has rotted away, and been supplanted by good substantial frame or brick structures. Large public school buildings have been and are being erected in all the towns of any considerable size, which are modeled after the latest and best styles of architecture, and furnished with all the modern appliances. In a few instances uniform courses of study have been adopted, which are admirably adapted to the wants of the pupils who are preparing to enter college, and are especially suited to the practical needs of the masses. The Paulding, Antwerp and Payne schools are foremost in this particular, being thoroughly graded with a view to having a systematic course of study and a conferring of degrees upon graduates. There are marked signs of progress in the intellectual and practical knowledge of the teachers throughout the county. Annual institutes have been held for the the past twenty-five years, and quarterly institutes for the past four or five years. The examiners of the county have generally been, and are, men of true moral and intellectual worth, and have sought by rigid and thorough examinations of teachers to secure a genuine system and high standard of education. The first board of examiners was J. O. Shannon, S. N. Webb and H. A. Brown; and the following are the names of persons who have since served in that official capacity: John D. Carlton, Russell Cushman, A. J. Champion, Samuel Means, Andrew Durfey, W. C. Means, Kelsey Vanderhoof, A. M. Russell, I. N. Glover, C. W. Prettyman, J. H. McCague, H. M. Ayres, T. H. B. Bashore, F. B. DeWitt, W. H. Snook, John D. Lamb, C. B. May, W. B. Jackson, J. J. Clark, W. H. Mustard, Lewis Snyder, W. B. Brown, A. D. Male, J. M. Birkhold and L. J. Shafer. John D. Carlton was the first person who commenced the vocation of teaching in the county. The writer remembers of hearing an old rhyme, years ago, which ran as follows:

John Carlton was a pedagogue,
A pedagogue was he;
He taught the Paulding county youth
In eighteen thirty-three.

The stanza was probably the spontaneous outburst of some poetically inclined student of the pioneer pedagogue, and if not fraught with rhymthic beauty, contains, at least, an historical fact worthy of being preserved. Further mention of pioneer teachers and of schools in general is made elsewhere in this historical sketch, and therefore unnecessary here.

The following is a list of youth, of school age, taken at the June enrollment of 1891, in the several special districts and townships in the county:

CHAPTER X.

CHURCHES.

AS the details of the early church organizations, also of the present church edifices, have been given in the preceding pages of this history there remains but little more to be said, unless it would be to give an extended and complete sketch of each church, and that, owing to our limited space, can not be done without infringing upon some of the other topics that must be mentioned. As has been shown the early Christians of the county met at the log dwellings of the pioneers, and cabin school-houses, to sing their songs of praise, and lift their hearts in prayer to the Most High. Happily, that is all past now, and neat and commodious edifices are erected in all parts of the county, where the various denominations can meet for worship. As a sample of the growth and development of Christianity in the county we will give the full history of one church, and what is true of its organization and advancement is in a measure true of all the others. Bethel Christian church, in Paulding county, was organized in a school-house in sub-district No. 4, Auglaize township, on the 9th of February, 1858, by Elders John Gillespie and John Bushong. This territory was then in the Auglaize conference, but when the Maumee conference was formed the church was transferred to it. In 1868 the Auglaize and Maumee conferences were consolidated into one, called the Northwestern Ohio Christian conference, and in which the church has been since that time. The charter members of the church were named: John Rickner, Rachel Rickner, John Gillespie, Susannah Gillespie, A. J. Frederick, Elizabeth Frederick, Ichabod Gillespie, D. P. W. Rains, Thomas Graham, Jemima Graham, William and Nancy Smith, and Jacob and Rosannah Eitniaer—fourteen in all. There are now on the church roster about 140 members. A hewed log church 25x30 feet in size was built in 1858, and used as a place of worship until 1874, when a neat frame structure 34x44 feet in dimensions was erected, and is yet in use as a church.

The names of ministers who have served as pastors of the church are: Rev. John Gillespie, eleven years; Rev. John Bushong, one year; Rev. Enos Foster, two years; Rev. Branson Good, six months; Rev. Ruff, three years; Rev. P. Richardson, one year; Rev. C. C. Sink, eight months; Rev. Lewis Gander, one year; Rev. Rapp, one year; Rev. Elijah Coil, six months; Rev. Garner, one year; Rev. G. R. Mell, three years; Rev. W. N. Deck, three years; and Rev. Leonard, the present pastor. John H. McCague has held the offices of deacon and clerk in the church from the year of 1860 down to the present time. The first Sunday-school that the church organized was in the spring of 1866, of which S. T. Morris was superintendent. The church has at present a very large and interesting Sunday-school, with J. M. Morris at its head as superintendent. The moral and christian influence which the church has thrown out upon the community around it is acknowledged and felt by all. May it long exist to spread its good work is the wish of the humble writer who traces its history to-day.

One of the first circuit riders to visit Paulding county was Elnathan C. Gavitt, who in after years became a presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal church, and resided at Lima. The following sketch is given by him in an address before a meeting of the Maumee Valley Pioneer association, at Defiance, on the 22d of February, 1878. He says: "I was born in Ohio. My parents emigrated to this state in 1805. This is my native home; here are the graves of my parents, wife and children. Many are the attachments and fond recollections which cluster around the scenes of my early days. My first missionary work commenced among the Wyandots at Upper Sandusky. This mission was first established by a colored man, Rev. John Stewart, a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, in 1816, and was the first Protestant Indian mission this side of the Alleghany mountains. My missionary work commenced among them in 1832, in connection with Rev. Thos. Thompson. At that day it was the policy of the church to hunt up all the white settlements and carry the gospel to them. Emigration to northern Ohio had commenced, the Maumee valley was fast filling up, and hence our missionary work was not wholly confined to the Indians, but extended over a large territory now included in the following counties: Crawford, Marion, Hardin, Auglaize, Allen, Van Wert, Hancock, Putnam, Paulding, Defiance, Williams, Fulton, Lucas, Henry, Wood, Ottawa, and several appointments within the bounds of Sandusky and Seneca. Traveling most of the time without roads or bridges, fording streams or swimming our horses, and sometimes lodging in the wilderness, preaching from two to three times a day, and all this had to be accomplished every four weeks, so as to reach the mission at Upper Sandusky by Saturday night, as one of the missionaries had to remain until the other returned, to superintend the house, farm and school, having from sixty to eighty children to be provided for. Let others think as they may as to christianity and the gospel ministry, it was the love of souls, the moral and religious improvement of these new settlements that prompted the ministers to make the sacrifices they did, and not the love of fame or wealth. My colleague, being a married man, was allowed a salary of $200 per year; but being a single man, I was only allowed $100; but this amount was not to come from the Indians, but must be secured from the whites; and each member was expected to pay 25 cents per quarter, which was called quarterage. The country being new and the people poor, the minister generally received about one-half his salary. The first five years of my itineracy I did not receive more than $40 or $50 per year, and much of this was in such articles as they could conveniently spare. However, it was customary for all the membership to pay something according to their ability, but such families as were destitute of means were cheerfully excused, providing they kept on hand a good supply of yellow-legged chickens.

* * * * * * * * *

"Most of the time while at the mission I provided for myself, cooking and lodging in the school house. My food was of the plainest quality, consisting principally of deer or bear meat, coon or opossum, with some dried corn and cranberries sweetened with Indian sugar, but not always free from hair or feathers. My bed was composed of skins, my pillow a calico sack filled with dry grass, the covering my horse blanket or cloak. I preached on the Sabbath, taught during the week, and doctored at night, except in extreme cases."

When we reflect upon this sketch of Elder Gavitt, we cannot help exclaiming: What a striking contrast there is between the pioneer circuit rider of fifty years ago and the well fed, well paid and not overworked ministers of the present time! The location of the churches of the county and their various denominations will be found in the township and village history of this volume.

CHAPTER XI.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

THE medical profession in the county is well and ably represented by a number of excellent physicians, graduates from the best medical schools of the country. Among the pioneers there were some able and excellent physicians. One of the first followers of Æsculapius, that we have any note of, to tread the soil of Paulding county, was Dr. Richard Allison, who accompanied Gen. Wayne in his memorable march down the Auglaize from Fort Recovery to Defiance. He was a native of New York and had served as surgeon's mate in the revolutionary war. He was surgeon general of Wayne's legion and had accompanied Gen. Harmar and Gen. St. Clair on their disastrous expeditions. After Wayne's victory at the battle of Fallen Timber, he resigned from the army and practiced in Cincinnati for many years. It is said that he was a "kindly, shrewd and sensible M. D., not overweighted with book-learning, but cunning as to the frailties of humanity." Dr. John Phillips, of New Jersey; Dr. John Elliot, of New York; Dr. Joseph Strong, of Connecticut; and Dr. John Sellman, of Maryland, were other surgeons who served with Wayne. Some of the pioneer physicians of the county were Dr. John Kingery, of Brown township; Dr. Royal B. Cooper, of Charloe; Dr. Marcellus, of Junction; and Dr. B. B. Woodcock, of Antwerp. Dr. Kingery, it seems, was a farmer and shoemaker, as well as a physician, from an entry made in one of his old account books now in possession of the writer:

DECEMBER 4th, A. D. 1845.

JOHN KRETZINGER TO JOHN KINGERY, DR.

Making one pair fine shoes	62½ cents.
To one-half bushel turnips	10 cents.
To one bushel potatoes	25 cents.
To medical attendance	$1.00.

In another entry of September 7, 1847, we find "John Bowers Dr. to John Kingery, $5.00 for filling one 'waggon' wheel and 'sitting' tire." This pioneer physician was a mechanic as well as a farmer and professional man. He resided on the opposite side of the Auglaize river from Old Fort Brown, and died about the year 1854. The principal diseases of the early settlers of the county was ague, and fevers of a miasmatic nature. Every new settler usually had a siege of chills which lasted until he wore it out and became acclimated; or until it wore him out and laid his bleached bones beneath the somber shades of the cemetery elm. Many of the first settlers died early in life, while others, having strong constitutions, lived to an advanced age. Whether the better class of physicians in the county at present could have combated the early diseases with more success than did the pioneer doctors is difficult to determine. Among the pioneers the physicians were also the dentists, charging twenty-five cents for each tooth extracted (with reduction in price if several were taken out), and plugging decayed teeth with tin-foil in lieu of gold. They were also their own apothecaries, ordering six months in advance their desiderated supplies of Glauber's salt, dragon's blood, balsam of Peru, melopodium, bitter apple, Huxham's mixture and other obsolete medicaments. We remember, when a mere urchin, of visiting Dr. Cooper's old "doctor shop" in Charloe, and regaling our olfactory nerves in the mingled odors which, like incense to the god of physic, arose from the brown paper bundles, bottles stopped with worm-eaten corks, and open jars of ointment, all having the resemblance of being the remains of some apothecary's store of King Solomon's days. Dr. Cooper was careless in his office, but was regarded as a good physician. He died about the year 1860, after having been a practitioner of medicine in the county for fifteen or twenty years. Bleeding was recognized as an effective remedy for many diseases among our pioneers, and the lancet was found in the antiquated pill-bags of every physician, and frequently used. For "tapping a vein" twenty-five cents was charged; for sitting up all night, one dollar; and for long rides to visit patients twenty-five cents a mile, payable in produce. We do not have the account of any instances where these pioneer chirurgeons were called upon to extirpate witches, but some of their prescriptions, aided by the credulity of their patients, often produced miracles worthy of the "faith cures" of these enlightened days. Dr. Olds settled in Charloe, in 1852, and began the practice, but he gave such large doses of calomel, and so many of his patients were salivated that the people ceased to employ him. About this time a song entitled "Calomel" was frequently heard. The following are two of its stanzas:

Said Dr. Olds unto the wife,
"Bring me clean paper, spoon and knife;
I'm sure your husband can't get well,
Without a dose of calomel."
Chorus: Calomel, calomel.
Without a dose of calomel.

The husband turned himself in bed,
And to his wife he feebly said:
"O let me bid this world farewell,
Without one dose of calomel."
Chorus: Calomel, calomel,
Without one dose of calomel.

Dr. Elijah J. Brown is the oldest physician in the county, having practiced in different localities of its limits for the past forty or fifty years. He is now a resident of Worstville and still in the practice. Dr. A. E. Schooley was for many years the leading physician of Junction. Dr. Jonas Hager and Dr. Milholland are the present physicians of that village. Dr. H. M. Ayres located in Charloe in the early sixties, and being thoroughly educated in the profession, began a reform in the practice of medicine. He was the first graduate of a medical college to settle in the county. In 1875 he was elected sheriff of the county and removed to Paulding. After serving as sheriff four years he again took up the practice of medicine, and is now in partnership with his daughter, Dr. Lillie Ayres, who graduated from a Cincinnati medical college in 1889, and is the only lady physician in the county. Dr. Sade E. Dix was formerly a lady practitioner in the county, but removed to Van Wert in 1889. Dr. J. L. Slager is a young and prominent physician of Paulding. He is the only post-graduate in the county, having attended a course of clinical lectures in New York city in 1887. Dr. C. E. Cunningham is an old practitioner in the county, now located at Paulding, and an excellent physician; Drs. Flavien and Montgomery are also physicians in that town and both have a lucrative practice. Dr. P. Alvin Dix, for a time a leading physician in Paulding, sold to Dr. Montgomery and located at Cincinnati, late in the fall of 1890, and in December, 1891, returned to Paulding, where he is permanently located and will practice as a specialist. Drs. J. W. Cartwright, J. W. McHenry and G. E. Brattain are located at Payne. Drs. John Harrod and C. V. Gorrell are also physicians at Payne. Dr. A. McDonnel was for many years a prominent physician at Antwerp, but died in 1888. Dr. A. C. McCann, Dr. Cave and Dr. Brattain are the present physicians of that place. Dr. D. W. Hixson practiced medicine for many years at Paulding and Antwerp, but died in the early part of 1891. Other physicians of the county are Drs. Sherrard and Burson, at Oakwood; Dr. Fife, at Melrose; Dr. Richardson, at Hamer; Dr. Ladd, at Broughton; Dr. A. H. Mouser, at Hedges; Dr. C. A. Bray and Tooker of Grover Hill; Dr. Hosford, at Latty; Drs. Gordon, Wilson Bros. at Scott and Dr. Wemuth, at Cecil; Dr. C. B. Chesher practiced medicine at Paulding from 1880 to 1890, when he was appointed superintendent of the Cleveland insane asylum, but was superseded by Dr. Eyeman, of Toledo, in August, 1891. Dr. Frank Saylor, of Antwerp, graduated at the Ann Arbor medical college in June 1891, formed a partnership with Dr. Flavein, of Paulding, but was shortly after appointed an assistant physician at the Cleveland insane asylum, which position he is filling at present. Drs. J. L. Slager, G. E. Brattain and W. H. Montgomery are the pension board of examiners in the county, Dr. D. C. Goings is the only "faith cure," Dr. Jas. Huston, who located in Paulding in 1886, is the only resident dentist of this county.

CHAPTER XII.

BENCH AND BAR.

THE organization of Paulding county took place in 1839, and its first associate judges, Nathan Eaton, Gilman C. Mudgett and John Hudson, met in the fall of that year and appointed H. N. Curtis, clerk, pro tem., and Andrew J. Smith, sheriff. The first court was held in the spring of 1840, at New Rochester, with Hon. Emery D. Potter as presiding judge. It was held in a room over Gen. H. N. Curtis' store. There being no lawyers residing in the county at that time, Edwin Phelps, of Defiance, was appointed prosecuting attorney. We have no means of giving a synopsis of the proceedings of this court, as the records have not been preserved. In those days it was customary for lawyers to travel with the judges from county to county throughout the entire circuit in which courts were held; and lawyers from as far east as Mansfield attended the courts held in Paulding and Defiance counties. They traveled on horseback and carried their volumes of legal lore in saddle-bags. The Hon. Thomas E. Powell, of Delaware, in a letter to W. C. Holgate, in 1878, says: "It is now upward of fifty-five years since I attended court at Defiance, with Judge Lane on the bench. I so attended it for five or six successive years." Mr. Powell was then a citizen of Perrysburg, having located in that village in 1820, and remaining there in the practice of law until 1830.

From New Rochester the court and county business was transferred to Charloe in 1841, that village having been made the county seat. John H. Palmer, S. Briggs and Patrick G. Good were the common pleas judges at this place; and H. N. Curtis, Christian Shroufe, John Hudson and Robert Shirley some of the associate judges. Shortly after the location of the county seat at Charloe, D. U. Harrington, John W. Ayres, John D. Carlton and A. S. Latty became resident attorneys of that village. By a special act of the legislature the county seat was located at Paulding in 1851, and the county business removed there from Charloe in the spring of that year. The first court held in Paulding was in a log cabin which stood on the corner of Water and Jackson streets, the site being now occupied by Dr. Flavien's residence. The associate judges were men chosen for their sterling worth, honesty and moral integrity, rather than for their knowledge of the law, for but few of them possessed any legal ability. Regarding this fact, an amusing incident is told as follows: Robert McCreary, or "Bob" McCreary, as he was familiarly called, a waggish sort of a genius who resided in Paulding, attended the court room one morning in the early fifties, and looking up to where the presiding judge and the three associates sat, he shrugged his shoulders and smilingly said: "Ah, a thousand judges on the bench this morning!" "Why, how is that, Bob?" some one said. "Why, one and three cyphers, doesn't that make a thousand?" The point was quickly seen and a general titter ran through the court room as the result of witticism. Poor Bob! he has long since been summoned to stand before that Great High Court, where alike the living and the dead are judged. By an act of the legislature in 1855 the office of probate judge was created, and that of associate judge abolished. Alexander S. Latty was the first common pleas judge to sit on the bench in the county after the abandonment of the associate judges; being elected in 1856 and continuing in the office for twenty years or four consecutive terms. He was a resident of Paulding when first elected and remained there until about the year of 1860, when he removed to Defiance, where he yet resides. He was a wise and upright judge, and retired from the bench only by his own choosing. The following brief sketch of his life is taken from the Toledo Daily Bee of August 17, 1891:

"One of the old land-marks of the Maumee valley who has been for more than half a century prominently identified with the development of northwestern Ohio is Judge A. S. Latty, of Defiance. The active career of Judge Latty was contemporaneous with that of Hon. A. P. Edgerton, Hugh McCullough, P. A. Randall, and other remarkable men who were leaders in the pioneer days in the great black swamp region. But few besides Judge Latty have lived to see the tangled wilderness transformed as if by magic into a veritable garden. Born in the west of Ireland about the time of the decline and fall of the empire of the First Napoleon, Judge Latty emigrated to America at an early age, settling first at Montreal, but coming later to New York state. His residence in the latter place was very brief, as in a short time young Latty turned his face to the westward and sought the forest fastness of northwestern Ohio. The year of his arrival in Ohio is fixed by the judge as 1837, and at that time the entire section was an unbroken wilderness, save for an occasional settlement. He soon became prominent in the new region by reason of his indefatigable energy and superior talents, and in a short time was a recognized leader. He was elected to several positions of trust, and served for twenty years as common pleas judge in the district then composed of Defiance, Williams, Paulding, Henry and Fulton counties. Since his voluntary retirement from the bench, he has given himself over entirely to the management of his large landed interests in Defiance and Paulding counties. In one township in the latter county, which bears his name, he at one time owned a large portion of the land, but of late years he has disposed of much of it. The closing years of his eventful career being spent quietly at his home in Defiance. He is in many respects a most remarkable man, full of learning, of infinite research, and as clever and interesting a conversationalist as can be found in the entire country."

In 1876, Selwyn N. Owen, of Bryan, was elected to succeed Judge Latty. He was a very popular and able judge, and was re-elected to a second term; but at the expiration of two years he resigned, in 1883, to accept a seat on the bench of the supreme court of Ohio, to which he had been elected. Having finished his term on the supreme bench, he remained in Columbus and engaged in the practice of law. On his resignation as common pleas judge, his place was filled, by appointment, by C. A. Bowersox, until the next general election. Mr. Bowersox was a learned and polished gentleman, and sat upon the bench with honor and dignity until the fall of 1884, when Silas T. Sutphen, of Defiance, was chosen to succeed him, and to fill the remainder of Judge Owen's term. In 1886, Judge Sutphen was elected to a full term, which he is now serving. On the 27th of August, 1891, he was re-nominated for a second full term. He is exceedingly popular with the bar, and an able and dignified judge, as well as a genial and social gentleman. The following pen picture of him is given by the Paulding News of September 3, 1891:

"Silas T. Sutphen was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, August 28, 1838. At the age of ten he removed with his parents on a farm in the village of Baltimore in the same county, where the succeeding ten years were spent in assisting his father and brothers in the arduous labor of the farm. During the winter months he regularly attended school, and by diligent application completed the course of study and entered Heidelberg college in the spring of 1859. He graduated in 1862 with the second honors of the class, and as a reward for his deportment and efficiency, he was awarded the valedictory address. Immediately thereafter he began the study of law with Judge James Pillars, at Tiffin. He was admitted to the bar in the district court at Fremont in 1862, and moved to Defiance in 1863. He entered the practice, and in 1864 was elected mayor of the city, serving in that capacity two years. He was chosen prosecuting attorney in 1867, and held that office six years. In 1884 he was elected to the common pleas judgeship to fill the vacancy created by the election of Judge Owen to the supreme bench."

With three exceptions the attorneys of Paulding county are located at Paulding. Hon. L. S. Gordon and D. W. Curtis are located at Antwerp, and M. B. Everett, at Payne. Mr. Gordon has been an attorney in the county since 1858. Mr. Curtis has, in connection with his other legal business, an extensive pension practice. Mr. Everett is a rising young attorney. Prominent among the Paulding lawyers is T. B. Holland. By his success in defending persons charged with crime, he has gained the reputation of being one of the best criminal lawyers in northwestern

Ohio. He was born in Allen county, Ohio, March 1, 1845, and removed to Paulding about the year 1873. He was prosecuting attorney of the county from 1875 to 1877. He is now the senior member of the firm of Holland & Lamb, John D. Lamb being his partner, also a resident of Paulding. Snook & Snook is another leading law firm of Paulding. W. H. Snook is the ex-prosecuting attorney of the county, having served two term; and John S. Snook, his cousin, is the other member of the firm. They were both born in Carryall township and formerly practiced in Antwerp. T. W. Shotwell and W. H. Phipps compose the firm of Shotwell & Phipps. The former came from Bucyrus and the latter from Noble county, Ohio. R. W. Pickering and F. P. Spriggs formed a partnership in the law profession in 1890, and are now doing a successful business. K. E. Shuster has practiced law in Paulding since 1883, and has built up a large practice. He was formerly a resident of Ada, Ohio. F. B. DeWitt hung out his first law sign in Paulding in 1872, and has from that time been engaged in the legal profession. He was elected, in 1891, as the first state representative from the county. Arthur L. Knapp, formerly of Meadville, Penn., located in Paulding in 1889, and opened a successful law practice. He was chosen mayor of the village in the spring of 1890, and is still an incumbent of that office. P. W. Stumm began the practice of law in Paulding about the year 1885. He is an old soldier, and makes a speciality of procuring pensions for comrades. Attorney C. W. Baughman has practiced law in Paulding since 1877. He is a native of Cincinnati, and was born in 1844. George I. Chatterton came from Clermont county, Ohio, to Paulding, in 1882, opened a law office, and is yet one of the legal lights of the county seat. J. B. Brodnix and his son, Vance, are gentlemen of the legal profession. The younger Brodnix was probate judge of the county from 1888 until 1890, serving two years of a term made vacant by Judge Lee's death. C. A. Seiders and Edith S. Seiders, of the firm of Seiders & Seiders, Paulding, Ohio, form the exceedingly rare instance where the husband and wife are in partnership in the law practice. Mrs. Seiders is the only lady lawyer in the county; is well versed in the profession, and an able member of the firm. She read law at Tiffin, Ohio, in the office of Miss Florence Cronise, who was the first woman to be admitted to the bar in the state of Ohio.

Colonel Samuel R. Mott came to Paulding in September, 1874, and has been an able member of the county bar since that time. He was born in Knox county, Ohio, January 12, 1832, and served over four years in the war of the rebellion, enlisting as a private in the fifteenth Ohio volunteers, and mustered out as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifty-seventh Ohio volunteer infantry, with brevet rank of brigadier-general. On his return home he completed the study of law and was admitted in 1869. He served two terms in the Ohio house of representatives from Auglaize county, but was defeated in the fall of 1891 as nominee of the democrat party for prosecuting attorney of this county. Fielding S. Cable commenced the practice of law in Paulding, in 1858. He was elected probate judge in 1860, and held that office until his death in 1870. Bennet Savage is another of the old-time lawyers of Paulding. Alonzo H. Seldon practiced for a few years in the early seventies in Paulding, and removed to Kansas, where he died a few years after. Thomas Emery was a Paulding attorney from 1868 to 1874, when he removed to Cleveland, and from that city to Bryan, where he is still in the practice. Lewis H. Plattor, of Defiance, removed to Paulding in 1878, and began the practice of his chosen profession. In 1883 he was elected prosecuting attorney, and held the office one term. In 1886 he removed to Spokane Falls, Wash., and was shortly after elected prosecuting attorney of Spokane county. In 1888 he was the democratic nominee for lieutenant-governor of the state of Washington, but was defeated. Mark D. Baldwin came to Paulding in 1883, and formed a law partnership with T. B. Holland, but in 1885, under the Cleveland administration, received the appointment of Indian agent to the Blackfeet Indians, and removed to the agency, at Piegan, Montana, where he remained until removed from office by a change of administration, in 1889. He is at present a resident of Grand Rapids, Mich. John S. Snook (an uncle of the present John S. Snook), was for many years a leading attorney of the county and located at Antwerp. He enlisted in the late Civil war, became lieutenant-colonel of the Sixty-eight regiment, Ohio volunteers, and was killed at the battle of Champion Hills, in Mississippi, May 16, 1863. T. J. Jones, David N. Osborn and C. A. Calhoun were former attorneys at Antwerp. Mr. Osborn and Mr. Jones died in that village, and Mr. Calhoun removed to some other location.

George W. Potter engaged in the legal profession at Paulding prior to his death in 1887. He was born in Wayne county, New York, September 11, 1826. G. F. Hargo enjoys the distinction of being the only colored attorney ever located in Paulding. He practiced in the county about the year of 1875, and was also a teacher of the colored schools. G. W. Cox was a former attorney in the Paulding court. M. D. Mann and A. B. McMillen were for some years an excellent law firm in Paulding; but Mr. Mann removed to Colorado in 1889, and Mr. McMillen to Los Gatos, Cal., in 1891. Willis B. Corbett, a bright young attorney of Tiffin, Ohio, located in Paulding in 1887. He is the present prosecuting attorney of the county, and is a republican. J. Holly was associated with T. B. Holland in 1875, in the practice of law. B. F. Ogle practiced law in Paulding in partnership with F. B. DeWitt for a year or two prior to 1879. W. A. Strong was at one time a lawyer in Paulding, but soon removed back to his native town, Kenton, Ohio. He compiled the first map of Paulding county. A. Calderwood, of Greenville, Ohio, opened a law office in Paulding in 1882, but remained only a few months. Hon. P. W. Hardesty was formerly a lawyer of Paulding and Payne, but now resides on a farm near Worstville. His son, Frank, also formerly practiced in the county, but removed to Indiana and embarked in the newspaper business. F. M. Rummell was at one time a Paulding attorney, but removed to Napoleon, and is now located in Defiance. Hon. Robert E. Reese and K. E. Fritter came to Paulding from Lancaster, Ohio, in 1882, and opened a law office in partnership. Mr. Fritter returned to Lancaster in 1883 and soon after died. Mr. Reese remained in Paulding until the year of 1887, when he went west and died at Seattle, Wash., July 1, 1891. He had served two terms in the state senate from the Hocking county district before coming to Paulding. Along in the fifties Lysander Williams practiced at Junction. He died in that village in the fall of 1867. G. W. Crosby opened an office in the spring of 1891. Formerly much of the legal business of the county was entrusted to foreign attorneys, but the high standard of excellence which the Paulding bar has maintained the past several years has led to the employment of home talent.

CHAPTER XIII.

NEWSPAPER HISTORY.

FULLY realizing the invaluable aid which the press has rendered to the writer in compiling these pages, a history of the county newspapers is now given as follows: The first newspaper of the county was established in 1853. It was named the Age of Progress, and published in the village of Paulding by Hon. P. W. Hardesty. In its columns were published the first delinquent tax and forfeited land lists of the county. It survived but for a few months, when its material was sold to Hon. A. S. Latty, who began the publishing of a paper named The Democrat. This paper was published for a year or two, and then sold to J. D. Baker, who changed it to the Republican, and after publishing it about a year in the county, removed it to Defiance. In the summer of 1856, John W. Ayres and Ezra J. Smith bought the material for a printing office, and began publishing the Paulding Eagle, with Fielding S. Cable as editor. It was afterward sold to Joseph O. Shannon, who conducted the paper until the fall of 1859, when the Eagle folded its pinions and sank down to rest upon its laurels. With its stock, and in the same office, S. R. Brown began the publication of the Paulding Independent, the first copy of which was issued November 10, 1859. The Independent continued to be published by Mr. Brown until the tenth of October, 1863, when its valedictory number was issued. The material of the office was sold to Dr. Daniel W. Hixson and Fielding S. Cable, who issued the first copy of the Paulding Press the next week after the demise of the Independent. The Press was published for a time, when the office passed into the hands of Thomas Melia, who changed its name to the Rural Ohioan. The paper was again purchased by Fielding S. Cable, who published it under the same name until his death in 1870. With the material of the Rural Ohioan Thomas Emery and Wesley A. Savage founded the Paulding Plain Dealer, issuing the first number June 30, 1870. The firm continued to publish that paper until June 10, 1873, when Mr. Emery issued his valedictory. Mr. Savage remained with the paper one week longer, then sold it to J. D. Baker, who, without changing its name, continued to issue it until March 23, 1874, when he removed it to some point in Wood county, Ohio.

In the year 1869, Hon. Joseph Cable began the publication of the Review, in Antwerp, but soon after removed it to Paulding. In 1872 he sold it to Messrs. Hammond & DeWitt, who began publishing the Paulding Journal. Mr. Hammond soon retired from the firm, and C. C. Scott was associated in his stead. Upon the retirement of Mr. Scott, the paper passed into the full control of Francis B. DeWitt, as editor and proprietor, and so continued until the spring of 1874, when it was sold to George W. Potter, who, with its material, founded the present Paulding Democrat, April 9, 1874. In the spring of 1876, Mr. Potter sold the paper to George P. Hardy and Peter Becker. In four weeks after the purchase Mr. Becker sold his interest to Robert Temple, who remained a partner only two months, when he sold his interest to Mr. Hardy. In April, 1877, it was re-bought by Mr. Potter, and in the following autumn was sold to D. J. Stalter and George P. Hardy. In the early part of 1878, it passed into the hands of the Mains Brothers, who conducted the paper nearly one year, and sold it to Ralph D. Webster in January, 1879. Mr. Webster continued its editor and proprietor until the fall of 1884, when, having been elected county auditor, he leased the office to his brother, Nelson R. Webster, who conducted it with E. A. Budd as editor. Mr. Budd continued to edit the paper until the 6th of February, 1887, at which time the publisher also assumed the editorial management. In March, 1889, the proprietor, R. D. Webster, again took charge of the paper and published it until sold to Frank J. Mains, in the spring of 1890. In January, 1891, the office was purchased by Frank Windiate, who, with C. W. Mains as editor, continued the publication of the paper for three weeks, and then sold it to Nial R. Hysell, then speaker of the Ohio house of representatives. Hon. M. G. Eggerman shortly after purchased a one-third interest in the office, and the owners became Hysell & Eggerman, with M. A. Kirchner as managing editor. In August, 1891, Mr. Eggerman sold his interest to his partner, Nial R. Hysell, who, in October, 1891, sold to Nicholls & Dickinson. Owing to its having received the bulk of the county public printing for the past few years, the Democrat is the most prosperous newspaper plant in the county.

The publication of the Paulding Register began in the early part of 1876, Messrs. Fisher and Keller being the editors and proprietors. Mr. Fisher soon retired from the paper, and Mr. Keller assumed control and published it about one year, when it was suspended. Its material was purchased, in 1877, by George P. Hardy and merged into the Democrat office.

What is now the Paulding County Republican was founded in Antwerp, April 25, 1866, by Will E. Osborn. It was then called the Antwerp Gazette, and was published in that village until the fall of 1878, when Mr. Osborn removed it to Paulding, changed its name to the Paulding County Gazette, issuing the first copy thereof November 25, of the above named year. In September of 1882, the office was purchased by James R. Conner, who conducted the same until December, 1883, when he sold it to the firm of Durfey & Moore. In the summer of 1885 it was purchased by A. C. Banks, who published it until the fall of 1887, when the office passed into the hands of an assignee. The assignee, Mr. C. A. Seiders, published it, with S. L. French as editor, until the spring of 1888, when A. W. Search became its editor and proprietor. Mr. Search published it about ten months and sold it to Andrew Durfey. Mr. Durfey changed its name to the Paulding County Republican, and remained with the paper about one year, and sold it to J. R. Ross, who is the present publisher. The Republican office is one of the best equipped in the county; and its presses, and those of the Democrat, are the only ones run by steam power in the county.

The Antwerp Banner was started in that village in the early part of 1879, by R. S. Murphy, who employed H. W. Spague to conduct the paper. It suspended publication September 1, 1881, by reason of its material being sold to Will J. Conant, who moved it to Dickson, Tenn., and started the Dickson County Press.

In the autumn of 1882, a man named Williamson began publishing the Antwerp Standard, but sold it the following winter to B. B. Banks and A. N. Smith. Mr. Smith soon retired from the firm, and Mr. Banks continued the publication of the paper until May 1, 1883, when he sold it to W. E. Osborn. With the material of the Standard office Mr. Osborn issued the first number of the Antwerp Argus, July 19, 1883, with E. A. Budd as associate editor. Mr. Budd remained with the paper until June, 1884, at which time he retired, and its editorial department passed into the charge of W. E. & N. H. Osborn. In the spring of 1889, the plant was leased to John F. Lusk, who purchased it in the fall of 1890, and is the present editor and proprietor.

The first number of the Oakwood Sentinel was issued February 28, 1889, by C. T. Carey, who, a few weeks later, sold an interest to Frank A. Hakes. Soon after Mr. Hakes became sole proprietor and continued to publish the paper until July 4, 1890, when he shipped the material to Houston, Mo., and founded the Texas County Sentinel. The following week Mr. Carey, having purchased new material, continued the publication of the Oakwood Sentinel, until April, 1891, when he sold it to a Mr. Martin, who remained with it only two or three weeks, when it was re-purchased by C. T. Carey, who, in turn, sold, September 17, 1891, to J. L. Lomer.

The Paulding News was founded in the winter of 1891, by Fred. W. French and James R. Thomas, who, with a new and elegantly equipped office, issued the first number February 12, 1891, under the firm name of French & Thomas, which firm continues to publish at present. It is a neat six-column folio, and bids fair to become a prosperous plant. The Free Press, the only German paper ever published in the county, is issued from the News office, under the editorial management of a Mr. Silberberg. During the fall of 1891, French & Thomas sold the Free Press to Joseph Silberberg, who is now owner and editor, and is located in the Democrat office.

In the summer of 1890 Sherman Mott began the publication of the Scott Messenger, in the village of Scott. In December of the same year, he sold to Charles O. Grimm, who published it until July, 1891, when he leased it to M. A. Kirchner, the present publisher.

The Star, Independent and Review, are the names of papers which have been published in Payne. Their histories will be found in the special history of Payne village. The Review office was leased in August, 1891, to Messrs. Hamilton & Underwood, who are the present publishers of the paper.

The latest newspaper venture in the county is The Judge, published at Melrose, by E. H. Battles and C. H. Yeagley. Its initial number was issued August 28, 1891.

CHAPTER XIV.

NATURAL GAS AND OIL.

PROFESSOR EDWARD ORTON, in a treatise on natural gas and petroleum, says: "They belong in a list of products of the crust of the earth to which we give the name of bitumens. Other bodies in the same list are the semi-fluid maltha and the solid asphaltum. All these substances unquestionably have a similar general history. They are found under the same conditions, and the transition of one to another, as of petroleum to asphalt, can be often noted. They are technichally known as hydrocarbons, carbon and hydrogen constituting almost their entire substance, the former about eighty-five per cent., and the latter about thirteen per cent. of them. They have long been known to man, and their use ante-dates history, but the importance which they now possess in the civilized world is of quite recent date The discovery and use of petroleum on the large scale is included within the past thirty years, and all the really important applications of natural gas belong to our own day, and are now in their initial stages.

"The theories as to the origin of petroleum and natural gas can be divided into two main groups, viz.: (1) Those which refer these bodies to inorganic sources, or, in other words, which make them the result of chemical affinity acting on mineral matter, and (2) the theories that regard them as the result of a partial decomposition of vegetable or animal substances that have been stored up in the rocks."

Reasoning from either of the above theories there is convincing evidence that an abundant supply of both gas and oil may be found beneath the surface of Paulding county. The first well drilled in the county was at Paulding, by the Paulding Oil & Gas company, in the summer of 1887. Both gas and oil was obtained, but not in paying quantities. Regarding the well the Paulding Gazette, of July 28, 1887, has the following: "The suspense is over. It has been demonstrated to a certainty that gas and oil underlie the city of Paulding. At 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the long listened for cry of 'Trenton rock is struck' was heard. It was reached at the depth of 1,473 feet and 4 inches. The drillers penetrated it four feet and rested for the night. On Wednesday morning work was resumed and at 2 o'clock P. M., at the depth of 16 feet in the trenton rock and 1,489 feet and 4 inches from the surface, gas was discovered. The news flew like wild-fire, and in a few minutes hundreds of our citizens rushed to the well. The wildest excitement prevailed all the afternoon, and corner lots ran up 100 per cent. in a few hours. In the evening a jet was attached to the mouth of the well and the gas carried about twenty feet up the derrick, where it was set on fire. The flames leaped upward to the distance of about ten feet, and shed a wild, weird light around upon the scenery in the vicinity of the well. Hundreds of people visited the grand lighting-up. 'Down to the gas well,' was the prevailing cry of the evening. Every age and sex caught the enthusiasm. Old men and boys, matrons and maidens, joined the promiscuous throng. All were there, from the spider-legged dude in his piccadilly collar, to the modest school ma'am, clad in her pure, bright robes of white. It was a scene for painters and poets to dwell upon, not common, prosaic editors; therefore, for the present, we desist."

LATER:—"Oil is found to be filling up in the well, already to the depth of ninety feet, and it is not known which will be the predominating element—gas or oil. The drillers are closely watching the well and further developments are hourly expected. It is not yet known whether it will be necessary to 'shoot' it or not. A meeting of the stockholders will be held this afternoon." In accordance with the decision of the stockholders explosives were put into the well a few days after, hoping to accelerate the flow of gas, but instead of so doing, it immediately began filling with salt water. Attempts were made to remove this, but of no avail; the well was rendered useless and, therefore, abandoned.

Since the above attempt, other wells have been drilled at Melrose, Payne and Antwerp, in all of which some oil and gas (mostly oil) has been obtained. In all of these trenton rock has been struck at a depth of 1,400 and 1,500 feet. What is known as the Lamb well, six miles west of Paulding, has yielded the best results of any yet in the county. It was drilled in the spring of 1891, and has a reported capacity of twenty barrels of oil per day. The Home Oil and Gas company, of Antwerp, and a company at Payne, are yet at work sinking wells, and from present developments there is but little doubt, if any, but that Paulding county will soon occupy a prominent position in the oil and gas field of Ohio.

CHAPTER XV.

GEOLOGICAL TREATISE.

THIS county occupies the angle between the Auglaize and Maumee rivers before their union, and extends a little beyond that angle on both streams. The Maumee is the principal stream of the county. It cuts off the northwest corner of the county, and runs a northeasterly course. The Auglaize is second in importance, cutting off the northeast corner, and flowing northwesterly. The slope of the county is very gentle toward the northeast. In general the surface is an unbroken plain, the valleys of streams, eroded entirely in the loose drift materials, is almost the only variation from a dead flat. On the north side of the Maumee there is a gentle descent of about forty feet from the county line to the river, at Antwerp.

The soil is that which is characteristic of the well-known "black swamp" region, the entire county being embraced in that tract. It is mainly of clay. A few sand ridges are found in the northeast corner of Brown township; the southeast corner of Auglaize township, along Six Mile creek in Emerald township, in the north part of Carryall township and in the southwest corner of Benton township. The sand in these ridges varies from six to twelve feet in depth and rests upon a superstructure of "hard-pan" clay. A few artesian wells are found in the north part of Carryall township, and wells of from eight to twelve feet in depth are found on all the sand ridges. The majority of the wells, however, are found in the clay or rock at the depth of from forty to sixty feet. Bowlders and stones are not common at the surface, but are found in the beds of streams in great numbers.

The timber of the county is embraced in the following list as noted in the geological survey: white oak, beech, cottonwood, red oak, elm, black ash, white ash, blue ash, black walnut, hickory, sycamore, black willow, trembling aspen, basswood, shingle oak, chesnut, oak, black cherry, mulberry, ironwood, sugar maple, soft maple, dogwood, buckeye, wild plum, poplar, thorn, pin oak, burr oak, prickly ash, honey locust, pawpaw, wahoo, water beech, slippery elm, hackberry, judas tree, apple and june berry.

The rocks that have been identified in the geological structure of Paulding county, range, according to Prof. N. H. Winchell, from the water-lime to the Hamilton. The following arrangement represents the formations in the order of their superposition:

Hamilton shaly limestone, Corniferous limestone, Onondaga limestone, Oriskany limestone,	.....Devonian.

The water-lime (of the lower Helderberg groups.)

The Hamilton limestone is known to underlie the northeastern portion of the county, and to present many indications of being also in Paulding township. Its line of contact with the corniferous limestone is plainly exhibited by the frequent exposures of rock in the bed of the Auglaize, where it crosses that river in Auglaize township. At the quarry of Samuel Doyle the Hamilton limestone is found in beds firm and uniform, showing but little shaly tendency, with dip north and northeast. Some of the blocks of stone taken out are twelve or eighteen inches thick. They are of a blackish blue, and are found on being exposed to the weather to be charged with Hamilton fossils. The canal aqueduct over the Little Auglaize river, near Melrose, was furnished with stone from this quarry about thirty-two years ago; and the long exposure of the stone in the abutments has caused them to check into hundreds of their beds, and, by the disappearance of the shaly parts, many well-preserved fossils are brought to view. These massive abutments are slowly crumbling away. Near the highway bridge across the Auglaize, east of Junction, is found a more enduring and persistent stone of the Hamilton group, overlying the beds in Mr. Doyle's quarry; also with dip to the north and northeast. These beds are hard, blue, crystalline, and almost unfossiliferous. In section 29, Paulding township, the bed of Flat Rock shows various indications of the Hamilton, on land owned by A. S. Latty and P. W. Hardesty. Many large fragments of black slate are seen in the bed of the stream and there is a noticeable ripple in the current. The indications spread over the space of a mile, but the actual beds are not exposed to view.

The corniferous limestone has been observed in only two points in the county—at the mouth of Flat Rock in Auglaize township, and in the Maumee at Antwerp. At the mouth of Flat Rock it makes a broad surface exposure, which gives name to the stream, and there dips toward the northeast, passing below the Hamilton. At this place there has been but little quarrying done. The fossils seen are mostly species of corals, with the usual associated brachiopods. These same beds were formerly worked for quicklime on the opposite side of the Auglaize river by William H. Mansfield. Numerous fossils are yet found near the site of this old lime kiln. The beds of corniferous limestone at Antwerp were formerly worked for flux for the furnace at that place. Only about three feet of its thickness was shown at the quarry, but the same stone is said to extend down three feet further, and to be succeeded then by a "rotten sandstone," that name being often applied to a coarse granular magnesian limestone, like the Onondaga. The outcrop here causes a very little rapid in the river, although the beds are not bare except where quarried, the water coming in contact with the bowlders only. The most common fossils are favosites, acervularia, coenostroma, and cyathophylloids. There is also occasionally a distinct crinoidal structure. Some of the corals are blackened, and smell of petroleum. Oil also gathers on the pools of standing water about the quarry.

The Onondaga limestone is the lowest member of the corniferous group in Ohio. It outcrops in the Auglaize river, in section 5, Brown township, where it was formerly burned for lime by Frank McEvoy The beds here are thinner than where exposed at a lower horizon. These heavier magnesian beds were formerly quarried at the Noble quarry, south of Charloe, in connection with the Oriskany, and including, also, some of the upper layers of the water-lime. The river here is thrown into a long series of rapids in passing these persistent beds. (For further description of the Noble quarry, see history of Brown township.) Beds of sandstone, supposed to represent the Oriskany of New York, are found in many parts of northwestern Ohio. These beds do not exceed an aggregate thickness of twenty feet, and are sometimes less than ten. The only place where this stone is found in Paulding county is at the Noble quarry. Here it is found in a bed six feet in thickness, and the stone in layers six inches thick. It was quarried for flagging.

The water-lime was the lowest member quarried at the Noble quarry. It was a blue-drab color, heavy and hard, close-grained, and was found in beds three and six inches in thickness. This stone appears in the bed of the Auglaize river at the mouth of the Little Auglaize, and at a point one-half a mile south of the mouth. It is also found at Oakwood; and in section 35, Brown township, south of Oakwood, the bed of the Auglaize is on the fine-grained drab beds of the water-lime. It is also shown in section 1, Washington township.

The deposit of drift throughout the county was laid down by the agency of the glacier, but the effect of standing water, which received the crude detritus from the ice, is seen in the occasional superficial, horizontal lamination of the upper six to ten feet. The bowlders contained in it are, almost without exception, marked by the well-known glacier scratches. It contains but little gravel. The sand formerly used by the Paulding furnace was from the Maumee bottoms, in Crane township, on land owned by H. B. Ferguson. Generally the drift of the county is very clayey and impervious to water. The beds of all the streams are in it, occasionally touching the rock, but never excavating it. Its average thickness is about forty-five feet. The flood plain of the Maumee rises about twelve feet above the stage of low water. The material of this plain is a sandy loam, containing many land shells. The face of the bank shows them in all parts, and the deposit has outwardly every aspect of the bluff formation of the Mississippi, and is probably of the same origin.

CHAPTER XVI.

HISTORY OF PAULDING.

IN the year of 1849 as a party of gentlemen in Van Wert were discussing the probable future of the northwestern counties of Ohio, one of them remarked that "the county seat of Paulding county was not where it should be and would probably be changed sometime." A shrewd speculator hearing the above remark quickly concluded that the change might be hastened by immediate and energetic action, and that he might profit by it. Accordingly lands were purchased near the geographical center of the county and the village of Paulding laid out by George Marsh, August 10, 1850. It was located in the midst of a dense forest, several miles from any human dwelling. By a special act of legislature the county seat was located there a few months after. The whole business had been conducted so quietly and suddenly that it was not until after the change had been made that the people of Charloe began to fully realize the prize they had. A few attempts were made to get the county seat away from Paulding, but they were futile, and after a few years its permanency was no longer doubted. Whether the location of the county seat at Paulding at the time that it was, was a speculative scheme or not, it was a good thing for the county, and in all probability prevented much sectional clashing, and fierce local wars in after years, which would have retarded the progress and development of the county. The county seat is near the center of the county and where it should be. Upon the removal of the seat of justice to Paulding a few log cabins were hastily constructed for the occupation of the county officers. The first house erected was a double-logged, one-story cabin, on the present site of Dr. Flavein's residence, and was built by Elias Shafer. In this cabin two terms of court were held, prior to the building of a court house. It was afterward occupied for several years by T. W. French as a residence. Among the first frame buildings erected were the Exchange Hotel, by Isaiah Richards, on the site of the present Thompson House; the Paulding House, by John Crosson; Mrs. B. Savage's residence, on the corner of Main and Jackson streets; and a building standing on the bank of Flat Rock, a few rods above the old bridge, which was built for a residence by Judge Latty, and yet owned by him. The old log cabins have all rotted down, or been torn away. The following retrospect taken from the Paulding Democrat will give the reader some idea of Paulding in "ye olden time:"

"There is perhaps no city or hamlet in Ohio that has had more amusing incidents connected with its past history than Paulding. About a third of a century ago, when our little village had less than a hundred inhabitants, the means of enjoying themselves being very limited, they would collect 'neath some venerable elm or at some settler's cabin, and there dance the fleeting hours away, or sit and chat, and eat roast venison, bear meat, hoe-cake, etc., till the shades of eventide warned them that their holiday was ended and 'twas time to depart to their respective homes. But e'en these holidays were not frequent; they were too expensive. The citizens were all in a manner poor, and it must be a continual hustle with them or starve. Would we celebrate the Fourth of July? Well, now, if we didn't nobody did. We never failed to have a big 'blow-out' on that day, rain or shine. How did we celebrate? Well, we generally had a dance; yes, always had a dance. I remember one Fourth, 'twas in 1854, we had a picnic and a dance down at that old hewed log house between here and the canal. It was called the 'block-house' then, and a man by the name of Wilson owned it. Did we take our baskets? Oh no! he (Wilson) furnished the 'grub' and we donated a little 'chink' to let the old fellow come out even. Yes sir, we had a speech, and a good one, too. The speaker's name was John F. Beaver, an attorney, who lived in Warren, Ohio, and at one time represented that district in the state legislature.

"Do I remember who attended! Oh, yes. Let's see! There was John Crosson and wife (he was sheriff then), and Tom French and wife. Dick Banks and wife, Bide Norton and his girl—well I can't think of all of them, but there was a good many more than that. Did we walk? Yes, part of us did, and the rest of us rode in a log wagon, fixed up for the purpose, and drawn by two yoke of oxen. We had red, white and blue ribbons tied on the horns of the oxen and on the one wagon. Patriotic to the core, you see. How long did we stay? Well, we stayed all night. There was only a wagon track road cut out at that time, and we couldn't see to follow that, so we stayed till daylight. Were we tired? Well, yes, we were all ready to quit."

The following is the entire list of locals published in the Paulding Eagle of October 7, 1858, and will show to the reader that the happenings of a local nature were much less frequent than at present:

"We publish this week an original tale by 'Harry Havelock.' We have the promise of another soon from our former contributor 'Charles M. Greenough.'"

"Court is now in session in this place—Judge Latty on the bench. No important cases have as yet come to trial."

"A Teachers' Examination will be held in Antwerp, on Saturday, October 16th, for the benefit of persons in that vicinity wishing certificates."

"See advertisement of Judge Smith in another column, headed, 'Farm for sale.'—The Judge's farm adjoins the town plat of Paulding, and he offers it on favorable terms."

"Lots in Paulding, the county seat, for sale. Apply to F. S. Cable, Real Estate Agent, Paulding, O."

"Several new advertisements are crowded out this week for want of space and time. Hereafter advertisements must be handed in by Tuesday morning to insure insertion."

"A meeting is to be held this (Wednesday) evening to take action with regard to the organization of an agricultural society in this county. We earnestly hope that a permanent organization will be effected and the interests of the farming community of the county materially advanced thereby."

From the same copy of paper we glean the whole number of home professional and business cards:

"F. S. Cable, Attorney at Law and Solicitor in Chancery, Paulding, Paulding county, Ohio. Will devote his attention to the practice of law in the courts of Paulding and adjoining counties."

"Dr. A. P. Meng, physician and surgeon. Office corner of Jackson and East streets, Paulding, Ohio."

"Bennet Savage, fashionable tailor, Paulding, Ohio."

"Samuel Fisher, blacksmith, on East street, Paulding, Ohio."

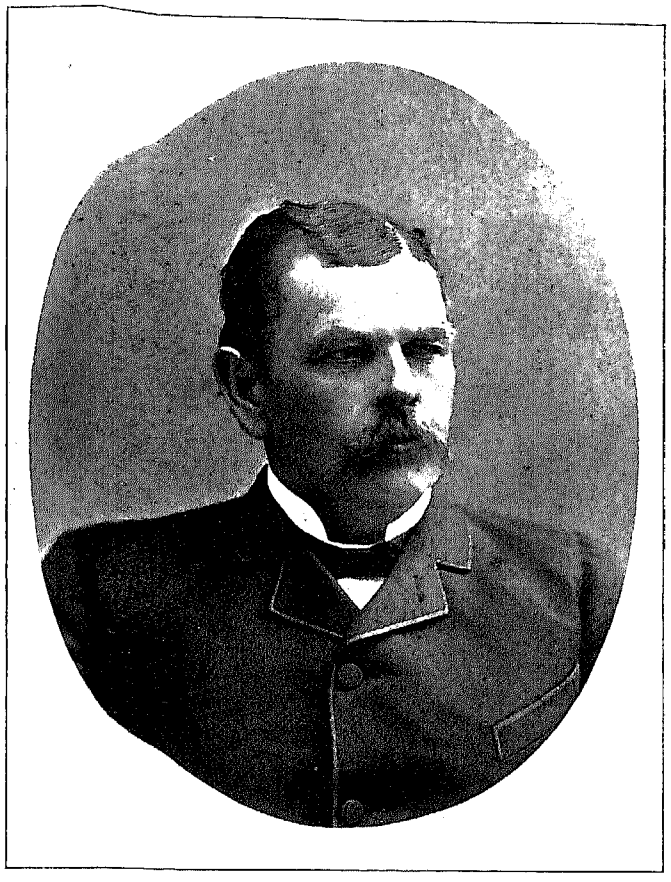

"Crosson House, by Sampson Merchant. North of court house, Paulding, Ohio."

"Exchange Hotel, by I. Richards. South of court house, Paulding, Ohio."

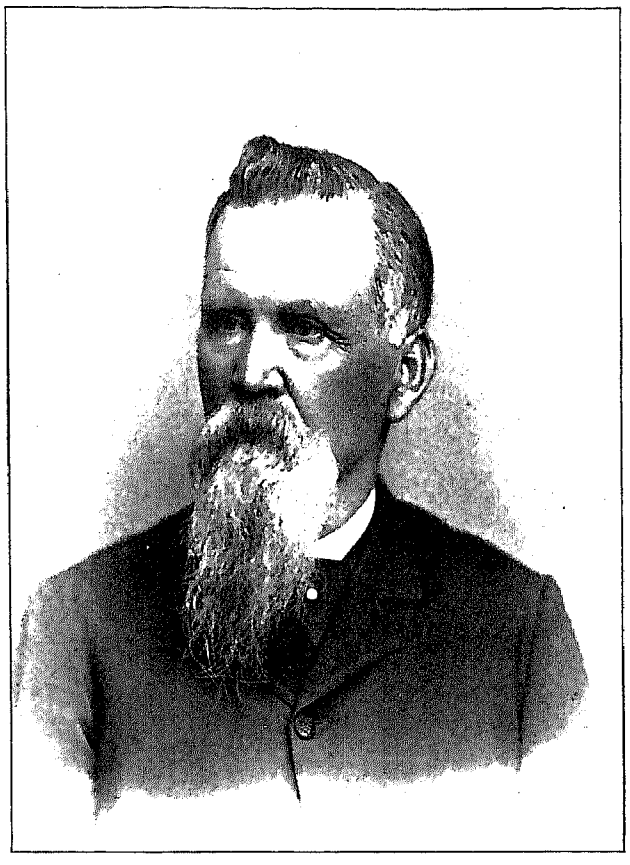

The pioneer merchant of Paulding was Elias Shafer. About the year 1857 he opened a small general store in the front part of his dwelling, which stood on the present site of J. B. Brodnix's residence. Dr. A. P. Meng afterward opened a dry goods and grocery store on the corner of Main and Perry streets. Hon. V. V. Pursel was also one of the early merchants of Paulding later on. Joseph Coupland embarked in the grocery business in Paulding in 1868, and soon had a large and flourishing trade. His son, John C. Coupland, is one of the present leading grocers of the city. J. P. Gasser opened a dry goods store in 1872; and M. C. Powell in 1873. For many years these were the leading mercantile houses in the place. Mr. Powell continues in the business and has a large patronage.

The present mercantile houses of Paulding are: Dry goods, L. M. Barnes, M. C. Powell and George A. Hall & Co.; hardware, Arthur Kling & Co., H. Katzenmeyer and F. M. Bashore; groceries, J. C. Coupland, J. McMahan, Lynde & Wright, T. W. Young, Nelson Davis, Harper & Outland and W. A. Savage; drugs, Dr. Flavein, A. G. Snow, Lynn & Ohl and Dr. Hebenthal; furniture, D. W. Young and Will Thompson; harness, A. Bybee, J. Eustache and C. Hoeffel; clothing, Frank Levy and Isaac Urbansky; jewelry, F. L. Bryant and W. A. Woodford; Con. Ragan & Co. and J. D. Welsh are dealers in all kinds of lumber, sash, doors, etc. J. C. Rice & Co. are retail dealers in hay, corn, feed, etc., and S. H. Myres deals in lime, cement and plasterers' material. Tate & Cromley deal in agricultural implements; J. L. Braden is the proprietor of the Paulding marble works, and John Beason and Will Ruff are fashionable tailors. Cullen, Richards & Severcool conduct a large insurance business; also Floyd Atwill is an insurance and real estate agent.

The principal hotels of the place are the Thompson House and the Paulding House. The Hamilton House, Reid's Place and the Shonk House also cater to the wants of the traveling public.

The physicians, attorneys and newspapers of Paulding, have been mentioned elsewhere in the Historical Atlas, therefore omitted here. T. H. B. Bashore, W. F. Straw, W. A. Savage, Tate & Cromley and A. N. Keys were former hardware dealers in Paulding; also W. Tallman, Dr. Morelock, Warren Baldwin and R. B. Porter were former druggists. Dr. H. M. Ayres was once the proprietor of a dry goods store in the place, and Kramer, Barnes & Murphy were a mercantile firm of the town at one time.

The early growth and development of Paulding was very slow; so slow, indeed, that after a period of twenty years from the date of its location its population was less than 500. But when we take into consideration its isolated and forest surrounded situation, this is not to be wondered at. Since the building of improved roads leading into the village, the location of a railroad, and the establishment of factories, its growth has been phenomenal. The decade between the years 1880 and 1890 was Paulding's developing period. There have been several additions to the original plat of Paulding, viz.: Whinnery's, Dix's, Cullen's, Gasser's, Hixson's, De Witt's, Barnes', Morrow's, Cox's, Williams' and Dix's second addition.

The village was incorporated as a hamlet April 12, 1873. Alonzo H. Seldon, Thomas Emery and Peter Kemler were the first trustees; W. A. Savage, clerk; and S. T. Miller, marshal. It was incorporated as a village April 13, 1874. Its first officers as a village were: A. H. Selden, mayor; Joshua Blank, treasurer; W. A. Savage, clerk; Jasper A. Ferguson, marshal; Frank Emerson, street commissioner; and M. C. Powell, George W. Remage, V. V. Pursel, Joseph Coupland, Warren Baldwin and Thomas B. Holland, councilmen. The present officers are: Mayor, Arthur Knapp; city solicitor, W. F. Corbett; marshal, Alex. Thompson; clerk, J. E. Atha; treasurer, Arthur Kling; and members of council: James Richards, A. Bybee, J. M. Lott, Con. Ragan, C. H. Jordan, and Dr. J. L. Slager; street commissioner, George Beck.

The first church building erected in Paulding was by the Methodist Episcopal denomination in 1872, at a cost of about $1,000. It is a neat frame, and was removed in 1884 two squares west to a location on Williams street, its former location being used as a part of the present school grounds. The Presbyterian church was erected in 1878 on South Williams street, and was also removed in 1889 to a location on Caroline street. Near the Presbyterian church stands the Disciple chapel, erected in 1889. Paulding's second school building was purchased by the United Brethren denomination and fitted up for a church. Its location is on Water street.

The public schools of Paulding take a front rank with those of northwestern Ohio, or, we may say, of the state. W. H. Mustard has been the efficient superintendent since 1888. The number of pupils enrolled is about 600. The following is the roster of teachers for the school year beginning September 1, 1890: A grammar and high school, J. W. Gilmore; Dixie department, T. J. Spriggs; B grammar, Miss Carrie Duckwall; C grammar, Mrs. W. H. Mustard; intermediate, Miss Ollie Ferneau; A primary, Mrs. May Thompson; C primary, Miss May Wells.

The first school house of Paulding was a small one-story frame, and stood on what is now the southwest corner of the court house square. It was built in 1853, and used for school purposes about sixteen years, when another was erected, and the old one removed to a location on north Main street, and fitted up for a dwelling. The second house erected was a two-story frame with two departments—one on the first and the other on the second floor. It was used for school purposes until superseded by the present one, and was then sold to the United Brethren denomination, as above stated. Paulding's third and present school building is a fine two-story brick, and was completed in 1884, at a cost of about $20,000. It is a large and beautiful structure, containing eight departments for study and a large hall for literary exercises. The building is heated throughout by the Smead system of hot-air furnaces; and is well supplied with elegant furniture, wall maps, and other school paraphernalia. Paulding's Union school building is truly an ornament to the town, and a lasting monument to the enterprising citizens who were instrumental in its building.

The city hall was erected in 1883, and is conveniently located on Williams street in a central part of the city. It is a two-story brick building, with fire engine room and city prison on first floor, and the council chamber and mayor's office above. Its cost of erection was about $4,000.

The court houses and jails which have been built in Paulding have received appropriate mention under the head of county buildings.

The first brick business room in Paulding was erected in 1881, by J. B. Cromley and Dr. P. A. Dix. It is two stories in height, with two business rooms below, and the second floor fitted up for attorneys' offices. It is known as the Cromley block. Since 1886 the Octagon block, the French block, the Phenix block, the Bank block and the Pursel block, all of brick, have been erected. In regard to the Bank block, the Paulding Democrat of February 28, 1889, has the following:

"Paulding has ample reason to feel proud of its new brick business blocks erected within the last two years. Among these, and one which attracts much attention from visitors to the town is the Paulding deposit bank building, at the corner of Perry and Williams streets, southwest corner of court house square. Messrs. Allen & Mohr, bankers, anticipating the future growth of the town and county, last winter purchased the lot upon which they were then located in a small frame structure, and last spring commenced erecting the fine corner building of which they took possession with their bank last Monday. While the appearance of the building outside is neat, the inside arrangement and finish is still more attractive. A vault of solid masonry, with heavy double iron doors and combination locks, all built with a view to complete protection from fire and burglars, contains their large time-lock safe. Electric burglar alarm wires run throughout the entire building, and so ingeniously arranged that it is impossible to open any door or window without ringing a bell in a sleeping apartment connected with the bank, making unobserved night entrance into the building impossible. The wood work is of oak and gives to the interior a rich and substantial appearance."

Paulding has two banks: Potter's bank and the Paulding deposit bank. The Potter bank was established, in 1874, by George W. Potter, and is the oldest bank in the county. Its present officers are, H. M. Ayres, president; W. B. Potter, cashier; Vance Brodnix, assistant cashier.

The Paulding deposit bank was established, in 1887, by C. H. Allen and W. H. Mohr. Owing to poor health, Mr. Mohr retired from the firm in 1890. The present officers are C. H. Allen, president; E. P. Copeland, cashier.

J. V. Olds & Co. did a banking business in Paulding for a short time in 1883.

The Pursel block, erected by Hon. V. V. Pursel, was the last built, being completed in the fall of 1891.

The most costly residences of the city are those of Gilbert Barnes, W. A. Savage, M. C. Powell, John Gill, R. D. Webster and W. H. Vermilye. They are all frame.

The Paulding flouring mill, built by Paul Weidmann, in 1890, is the best in the county. It has a capacity of 100 barrels per day.

The civic societies of Paulding are as follows: F. & A. M. lodge, No. 502, F. M. Bashore, W. M.; I. O. O. F, Paulding lodge, No. 577, I. J. Webster, N. G.; John Riblet command U. V. U., J. B. Brodnix, post commander; S. of V. camp, J. E. Atha, captain; Thedore Merchant Relief Corps, Mrs. L. L. Hebenthal, president; Theodore Merchant G. A. R. post, R. S. Murphy, commander; and Beatrice lodge D. of K., Mrs. Lena Hebenthal, noble grand, and Dr. Lillie M. Ayres, secretary.

A young men's reading room is maintained under the auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U., over the postoffice.

The fire department consists of a volunteer hose company, and a hook and ladder company. A steam fire engine is owned by the city. The Paulding county agricultural society has a fair ground adjoining the city on the southwest. It contains twenty-five acres, and is well furnished with suitable halls, race track, etc. Twenty annual fairs have been held by the society.

A bill passed the Ohio legislature in the spring of 1891, enabling the village council to issue bonds to the extent of $45,000, with which to improve the town; and steps are being taken to sewer and macadamize the streets. An iron bridge was built across Flat Rock, at the foot of Jackson street, in the summer of 1891.

The population of Paulding in 1880, was 483; in 1890, it was 1,873.

CHAPTER XVII.

HISTORY OF ANTWERP.

ANTWERP is the only village in Carryall township. It is situated one mile north of the southern border of the township, on the line of the Toledo, Wabash & Western railway, and four miles east of the Ohio and Indiana state line. Its location is a very pleasant one, being on the right bank of the Maumee river and in the midst of a fertile farming region. The village was laid out in 1841 by Gen. Horatio N. Curtis, and surveyed by W. Wilshire Riley, who is yet alive, as will be seen by the following letter published in the Antwerp Argus, July 9, 1891:

CROMWELL, CONN., JUNE 29, 1891.

To the 4th of July celebration committee, Antwerp, Ohio:

GENTLEMEN — I was happy to receive your cordial invitation to attend the 115th anniversary of the declaration of our national independence. I sincerely regret my inability to join you on the joyous occasion, when I should have the pleasure of meeting the pioneers and their descendants, who by their industry have subdued the forests and have built up a thriving and patriotic city. To me the contrast would be most pleasing and magical, since in 1841, in company with Horatio N. Curtis and Samuel Rice, we surveyed the town, and after hours spent in choosing a name not in the postoffice directory I suggested Antwerp — and we unanimously christened it Antwerp. As I cannot be with you in person, permit me to contribute these lines to your celebration:

Our glorious declaration for the first time on earth,
Proclaimed the revelation that all were free by birth;
Endowed by their Creator to seek their happiness,
With rights to liberty and life, and none should them oppress.

W. WILSHIRE RILEY,
Of Cromwell, Conn., and one of the founders of Antwerp.

Since the first platting of Antwerp there have been several additions to the town, among which are Daggetts', Shirleys', Banks', Johnson's, Jones', Smith's, Murphy's, Wilhelm's and Daggett's second and third additions. The business portion of the town, for many years, was along the line of the Wabash & Erie canal, where wharves, warehouses, hotels and business houses were erected; but on the building of the Wabash railroad, in 1855, the village began to move northward, and many of its first buildings along the canal have rotted down. The Pococks, Applegates, the Harrises, Graves and Banks families, the Daggetts Murphys, Gordons, Doerings, Osborns, Zubers, Reebs, Champions, Saylors, Whites, Georges, Ellsworths, Snooks and Mooneys, may be said to have been the builders of Antwerp, and to form the present progressive element of the place. The village was laid out on the prospect of the Wabash & Erie canal, and received its first boom on the completion of that line of navigation; its second increscent period began on the building of the Wabash road; and the third on the location of the Antwerp Iron furnace and other manufacturing industries in the place. For many years it was the metropolis of the county, until exceeded in population by Paulding in the census of 1890. It is now the second village in size and importance in the county.

For some years prior to the Civil war, John J. Shirley was one of the leading merchants of the place. He erected the first brick business room in the place about the year 1866, and died after its completion. The building has been occupied for several years by the large mercantile firm of Harris, Graves & Co. Mr. Shirley was a captain in the One Hundred and Thirty-second Ohio volunteer infantry.

In an Antwerp Gazette of January 22, 1874, the following extracts of home advertisements are found, all of which go toward making up the history of the place:

"J. T. Rymer's cheap cash store; Main street, south of railroad, Antwerp, Ohio. Dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, ready-made clothing, etc."

"Gordon Brothers, dealers in general hardware, agricultural implements, builders' hardware, carpenters' tools, etc., Antwerp, Ohio."

"New furniture rooms — George B. Terwilliger, proprietor."

"John B. Zuber, groceries and provisions."

"Young & Knapp, hardware dealers."

"Drug store! Drugs, medicines and fancy goods. A. McDonnel, proprietor."

"Livery stable. D. J. Barnett, proprietor. Barn south of railroad."

"Domestic sewing machine. Don't balk nor run away going down hill. Joseph M. Gaston, agent."

"Clocks and watches. Thomas Dalton, Main street, Antwerp, Ohio."

"Money can be had at the Antwerp loaning bank of White & George Business transacted by B. J. White."

"K. K. Carver, Main street, south of railroad. Dealer in groceries and provisions."

"Exchange Hotel. A. Ellsworth, proprietor. Everything new, convenient and comfortable."

"D. N. Osborn, attorney-at-law, real estate and claim agent."

"W. N. Snook, real estate and collecting agent, Antwerp, Ohio.

"Drs. Thomas Cave, A. C. McCann, Brattain, Pierce and Hagadorn, look after the health of the village and community."

"O. F. Perry, contractor and builder. Builds all kinds of truss bridges on the latest and most improved plan."

"T. J. Jones, notary public, real estate, collecting and insurance agent."

"Joel Bruening, manufacturer of and dealer in all kinds of plain and fashionable furniture. Rooms east of Champion House on the canal."

"Adam Cline, manufacturer of and dealer in boots and shoes."

"W. E. Osborn, dealer in school, miscellaneous and blank books, stationery, toys, notions, etc., Main street, one door south of Young & Knapp's."

The above extracts will show the reader the business of Antwerp, twenty years ago. A few of the firms and dealers still remain in the same business as then, but many have died or moved away, and their places and business been supplanted by others. The Gordon brothers yet remain in the hardware business, and W. E. Osborn continues a dealer in books, toys and notions. John B. Zuber has changed from a grocery store to a general dry goods, clothing and grocery store. L. S. Gordon is yet an attorney-at-law in the place, and A. Ellsworth, proprietor of the Exchange hotel. The following is a brief history of the manufacturing industries of Antwerp, past and present: The first manufacturing establishment to be located in the village was the Antwerp stave factory. It was established by the Antwerp stave company about the year 1860. The company consisted of Harris, Beugnot & Beugnot. This company operated it fourteen or fifteen years; and then it passed into the hands of Henry George, B. J. White, Jacob Saylor and M. P. Jacobs. These gentlemen operated the factory until 1885, when Mr. George — the last remaining partner — sold his interest to B. J. White, who associated with him as a partner Mr. J. Wallingsford. The factory manufactures staves and heading. The capacity of the works is 5,000,000 staves and 10,000,000 sets of heading per year; saw mill 20,000 feet of lumber per day. The main building is 100x20 feet in size; the engine forty-five horse power; and the grounds covered by the factory, three and one-half acres. About thirty-five hands are employed. The Antwerp furnace was located in the year of 1865, and ceased operations about the year 1881. Mention of this furnace is made elsewhere in the history. The Antwerp hub and spoke company is a large concern and is elsewhere mentioned at length.

The Gay pail factory was built in the year of 1882, and while in operation was one of the most extensive factories of the kind in the state. It gave employment to about seventy-five or 100 hands, and had a capacity of 1,500 complete pails per day. The proprietors of the factory reside in Cincinnati, and located it at Antwerp in order to be near a large belt of cottonwood timber, from which species the pail staves are made. Owing to an over-stocked market of the product manufactured and a consequent decrease of price, the factory closed its doors in 1887, and has not been in operation since that date. The Saylor & Son hoop factory was operated in Antwerp for some years; but was removed to a location in Michigan, in August, 1891. Champion Bros. & Eli Munson operated a hoop mill in Antwerp for some years along in the eighties. A good steam flouring mill is located in the village. It was built in 1872 by Peter Snook and James W. Johnson. It is now operated by Carr & Smith. There are four church edifices in Antwerp — the Methodist, Presbyterian, Catholic and Christian. The Methodist church was built about the year 1860, and is the oldest in the village. It is a frame. The Presbyterian is of brick, and is one of the only two brick churches in the county. The Catholic and Christian churches are neat frame buildings. The principal mercantile establishments of the village are the general dry goods and grocery stores of Harris & Graves, O. S. Applegate, John B. Zuber, Henry George & Son and B. J. White; the hardware stores of Joseph Reeb and Gordon Bros.; the grocery house of Pocock Bros.; Mrs. A. Schilb's furniture store; the drug store of Mrs. E. C. Emanuel; the exclusive boot and shoe house of John Yager; the book and notion house of W. E. Orborn; A. N. Smith's Boston bargain bazaar, and the drug and jewelry house of Graves & Wesner. There are also several restaurants. Ely & Bissell are the proprietors of the only elevator in the place, and buy and sell grain, live stock, baled hay, etc. John Cromley is the proprietor of the City livery. Will Cromley, Avery Ellsworth also do a nice livery business. The Exchange hotel and the Commercial house are the hotels of Antwerp. The Wabash road has a very neat and commodious depot near the center of the village; also a small park adjoining the same. Riverside park is owned by the village, and is a beautiful grove situated on the bank of the Maumee in the eastern outskirts of the town. A beautiful cemetery is located west of the park.

The civic societies represented in Antwerp are the Carryall lodge, I. O. O. F.; W. H. Doering post, G. A. R.; F. & A. M., Antwerp lodge; Antwerp division, S. & D. T.; A. L. & H., American Council; and the W. H. Kauffman camp of S. of V. These societies are all large and in good working order.

Notwithstanding the excellent fire company which is maintained in the village, it has suffered from several disastrous fires which have swept away whole blocks. The buildings burnt have been frame, and have most been replaced by good substantial brick buildings, so that now the principal business houses are of that material. There are many beautiful and attractive residences in Antwerp, among which may be mentioned the brick residences of H. H. Gordon, Hon. Henry George and Mrs. A.

Schilb, and the frame residences of John B. Zuber, T. A. Graves, P. P. Doering, Joseph Reeb, W. E. Osborn, Fred Barchard, W. F. Fleck, Mrs. Harris, Henry Harris and Z. T. Graves. Hon. L. S. Gordon will complete in the fall of 1891 one of the costliest and most handsome residences in the county. The Union school building at this place is a large, two-story brick, containing six rooms, and is heated by furnace. It is built in modern style and is neatly furnished in the latest and most approved patterns of school furniture and apparatus. It was completed in the year of 1876, at a total cost of $17,000 for the building and furnishing. The schools are among the most prosperous in the county, and the enrollment second only to the enrollment at Paulding. The attorneys and physicians of the place have already been mentioned in this work, under appropriate headings.

In the way of amusement halls, Antwerp was in the advance of any town in the county. Its first hall was fitted up with stage fixtures about the year of 1867, on the second floor of the Shirley building, and was known as the Shirley hall. It was used by theatrical companies for many years. George's hall was fitted up with a stage, curtain, etc., in 1883, and used for a time. Chester's opera-house was built in 1886 by John Chester, and was a neat and commodious hall, well furnished with seats, scenery, etc. It was only at the service of the devotees of the histrionic art for about one year, when it was swept away by fire. The present amusement hall is the Band opera-house, built and controlled by the Antwerp Cornet band. It is visited by some very good troupes during the theatrical season.

The finances of the village are in good condition and its municipal business transacted by able and efficient officers. A bill passed the legislature in the spring of 1891, granting the privilege of bonding the village for improvements, such as sewering the town, grading and lighting streets, etc.

The Argus is the only newswaper published in the village. Its editor and proprietor is John F. Lusk. The paper is a four-column folio, ably edited and neatly printed.

The Exchange bank is the only one in Antwerp. It was established in 1889 by A. P. Murphy, who is the cashier and does a general banking business.

The population of Antwerp in 1880 was 1,223; in 1890 it was 1,463.

CHAPTER XVIII.

HISTORY OF PAYNE.

WHEN what was known as the "Continental" railroad was being graded, W. C. Hedges, of Tiffin, laid out several towns along its line. Among these were Oakwood, Hedges and Payne, in Paulding county. The original plat of Payne was therefore made in 1872, by W. C. Hedges, and the surveys made by Noah Ely, at that time county surveyor. At first the place bore the dignified title of Flatrock City; and in the Paulding Democrat of May 14, 1874, were the following advertisements pertaining to the village:

"Great excitement at the New Flatrock grocery store, at Flatrock City, Paulding county, Ohio! When you go to Flatrock, call on J. P. Radenbaugh & Co., who keep on hand a choice stock of groceries and provisions, and everything usually kept in a first-class grocery store; also, keep a full stock of boots and shoes. The highest market price paid for all kinds of produce."

"The latest news! New store at Flatrock! By Hiram Gaut. Where tinware, crockery, dry goods, boots, shoes and ready-made clothing are kept in abundance, at low prices. Cash paid for staves, hoop-poles, and black-ash hoops. Come in the morning, trade, and go away satisfied."

Additions were made to the village in 1878, by James Malott and Peter Lehman, and the name changed from Flatrock to Malottville. A few buildings were added to the village from time to time, but the commencement of its active growth did not occur until 1882, at which time the Nickel Plate railroad was completed through the place. About this date, Gen. W. H. Gibson, of Tiffin, made an addition to the town and built several business rooms; and it may be said that to his efforts can be attributed the present prosperity of the place. The village was incorporated in 1883, under the name of Payne, and since that time has sustained a healthy and rapid growth. From a half a dozen houses and a population of forty or fifty, in 1880, the census of 1890 gave it a population of 1,146. This rapid increase is owing partly to the location, but mostly due to the energy and enterprise of its citizens. The town is well lighted, has good, substantial sidewalks, fine dwellings and numerous factories, all of which combine to make it a desirable place in which to locate. The village is located in both Harrison and Benton townships, the larger portion being in Harrison. It is six miles north of the south line of the county, four miles east of the Indiana and Ohio state line, and ten miles southwest of Paulding. In size it ranks third in the county. On the night of September 15, 1887, the village was visited by a very disastrous fire, which swept away an entire block of frame buildings lying on the south side of Merrin street, and incurring a loss to the citizens estimated at $50,000. Heroic efforts were made to put down the fire, but nothing could be done except to save the neighboring buildings. The fire, however, may be regarded as a benefit to the town, for upon the cinders of the not very substantial wooden buildings were soon after erected new and attractive brick blocks.

The village was visited by another destructive conflagration about 1 o'clock a. m., March 11, 1891, in which five business houses, together with the most of their contents, were laid in ashes. An account of the fire is given in the Paulding Democrat of March 12, 1891, as follows: "The thriving village of Payne, this county, was visited by another destructive fire about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The flames were first discovered in a shoe shop, and are supposed to have originated from a defective flue. The building was soon enveloped in flames, which rapidly spread until the saloon and restaurant building occupied by Albert Geist was also beyond the point of being saved. Mr. Geist's loss is about $1,500, with $1,200 insurance. In the second story of this building lived the families of L. C. Burke and a man named Grady. Mr. Burke's loss included all his household goods, and his family barely escaped with their lives. Mr. Grady saved a portion of his household effects, his loss being estimated at $500. The fire next spread to the building occupied by W. E. May as a barber shop, which was also entirely destroyed, May saving only a part of his outfit. The rooms over the barber shop were occupied by Seller's photograph gallery and Dr. Gorrell's office, every thing in the rooms being destroyed except the doctor's account books. The next building to succumb to the devouring element was that occupied by P. H. Boullion with a meat market and grocery. The scene of the fire was at the corner of Laura and Merrin streets, and five buildings in all were burned to the ground. All were frame structures, and the loss aggregates about $7,000."

Notwithstanding the fact that the above mentioned destructive fires have occurred, Payne is, perhaps, better equipped than most of her sister towns for fighting the devastating element, fire. It has a good fire department, organized in the spring of 1887, and composed of about forty members, an excellent hand-engine, purchased at Seneca Falls, N. Y., with about 500 feet of hose.

Payne has six churches, which prove conclusively that as a class its citizens are of a moral and religious nature. These church edifices have been erected by the Methodists, United Brethren, Disciple, Lutheran, German Reformed and Catholic denominations. They are all frame structures excepting the Methodist, which is a neat brick.

The village is alive to educational matters, and is provided with a good frame school house, containing six departments. It was completed in the autumn of 1885, at a cost of about $3,500. The civic societies located at Payne are as follows: John Stabler post, No. 179, G. A. R., organized May 22, 1883, with twenty charter members; Walter S. Payne camp, No. 149, S. of V., organized October, 1886, with twenty-two members; Payne lodge, No. 725, I. O. O. F., organized July 16, 1883, with eighteen charter members; Payne lodge, No. 377, K. of P., instituted August 22, 1889; and Perseverance lodge, No. 502, I. O. G. T., organized January 28, 1889. The prosperity and almost phenomenal growth of Payne was largely due to the number of excellent factories located there. They are the motive power which roll the wheel of progress along her busy streets, and may be briefly mentioned as follows: One of the first to locate was the stave and lumber company of N. E. Prentice & Co., which began operations in 1881. The firm was composed of N. E. Prentice, Edwin Cowell and J. K. Barnes. In 1886 Mr. Barnes retired from the firm and the business was conducted by the other two members. Their principal business is the manufacture of pail staves, of which, in 1889, they shipped 2,395,100 pail staves, 98,650 pail covers and 124,200 pail bottoms. Here is also manufactured patent and lap siding, molding, flooring, beaded ceiling, lath, shingles, etc. About twenty-five hands are employed. This business was sold in June, 1891, to the J. S. Emigh Lumber Co., who are the present proprietors. In speaking of this company the Payne Review of July 2, 1891, says: "The J. S. Emigh Lumber company have organized with the following officers: J. S. Emigh, president and treasurer; C. H. Allen, vice president; George B. Brown, secretary; directors, J. S. Emigh, C. H. Allen, George B. Brown, R. G. Allen and J. E. Jones. This forms one of the strongest companies in northwestern Ohio, and the new firm is starting out with flattering prospects. We feel proud to have such a company located in our village. The firm manufactures and wholesales and retails rough and dressed oak, ash, cottonwood, sycamore and elm lumber; also molding, shingles, lath, doors, blinds, sash, and in fact all kinds of finishing lumber. They ship a great deal of lumber and employ a large number of men and teams." The Payne Hoop Co. is a valuable acquisition to the place. It is composed of the firm of Harris & Graves, Joseph Tarault and G. W. Ober. The factory is supplied with all the latest improved machinery for manufacturing elm hoops and has a capacity of about 30,000 hoops per day. Power is furnished by a ninety-five-horse power engine. Capt. E. O. Harris is manager and Mr. Ober is foreman of the factory. The firm employs about thirty workmen. Jacob Ream, one of Payne's most genial gentlemen, is the proprietor of a lumber manufactory and planing mill. He located in the village in 1876, and by active perseverance and fair dealing has built up an extensive and profitable lumber business. The mill is fitted up with all the best and latest improved machinery, and the yards are covered with millions of feet of lumber awaiting sale or shipment.

The stave factory of P. H. Hyman & Co. is an extensive enterprise, and gives employment to twenty-five or thirty laborers; another stave factory, owned by the firm of Hyman & Schnelker, completes the list of factories in Payne.

In the mercantile line Payne has several houses, whose proprietors carry large and well selected stocks of merchandise, and do an extensive business. Of these the following may be mentioned: The dry goods and grocery store of Harris & Graves, the general store of Thos. Lamb, the hardware stores of Henry Hyman and Michael Finan, the drug stores of Mrs. E. C. Emanuel and E. A. Field, the clothing house of M. L. Barney & Co., the grocery houses of S. H. Barnes and A. B. Oppy, the bakery and restaurant of O. V. Siniff; H. C. Weaver's harness store (successor to A. Spiece), and the furniture store of J. C. DeLong.

For several years prior to 1890, Don R. Gibson was one of the leading merchants of Payne, and conducted one of the largest general stores in the county; but owing to poor health he has now retired from the business. E. W. Fields and George Kilpatrick were formerly clothiers of the place, and Quince & Radenbaugh kept a general store for many years.

The principal hotels of Payne are the Union house and City hotel, both located on Main street. Henry Radenbaugh is the owner and present proprietor of the former; and Jacob Haddox was owner and proprietor of the latter from March 4, 1881, until the spring of 1891, when he retired from the business. Peter Feiderspeil is the only wagon-maker of the village. Daniel Bower is the photographer of Payne. His studio is located on East Merrin street, where he is excellently equipped for "securing the shadow ere the substance fades." He is a first class artist and his pictures always please.

The buildings of Payne are for the most part frame structures; but during the latter part of the last decade a few good, substantial brick ones were erected. Among these may be mentioned the Emigh block, the Hyman block, and the block erected on the corner of Merrin and Main streets, by A. Woolard. In the second story of the latter is a hall fitted up with stage, scenery, curtain, and other paraphernalia of an opera house. It is rented to traveling theatrical troupes and is known as Woolard's hall. The leading millinery house is that owned and conducted by Mrs. M. B. Jordan and is first-class in every detail. The business was established in 1886 and has annually increased. The town is plentifully supplied with barber shops, livery stables, billiard halls, restaurants, etc.

Five physicians, Dr. J. D. McHenry, Dr. J. W. Cartwright, Dr G. E. Brattain, Dr. John Harrod and Dr. C. V. Gorrell, look after the "aches and ills that flesh is heir to" in Payne and the surrounding country. Dr. A. F. Randolph is the resident dentist.

The legal fraternity is represented by only one attorney, M. B. Everett, Esq., who has an office in the Hyman block, and gives special attention to the business of his profession. H. K. Gaut is a notary public and insurance agent, and Oliver E. Kilpatrick is a notary public.

The following is a roster of the village officers in 1890: Mayor, H. K. Gaut; clerk, K. J. Vanderhoff; treasurer, Peter Finan; and marshal, Joseph Venrick.

The Nickel Plate railroad has a neat and commodious depot at Payne; and a good elevator for the storage of grain is owned by the firm of Foster & Olmstead, of Fostoria, and used by the grain dealers of the village.

The first newspaper published in the place was the Payne Star. Its initial number was issued in the spring of 1883; but not being a "star" of the first magnitude, it soon ceased to twinkle. Shortly after its demise, the Payne Independent arose above the journalistic horizon, with W. C. B. Harrison as editor and proprietor, and for a year and some months shed its voluminous light upon the citizens of Payne and the surrounding country. Not being well patronized its proprietor moved the plant to Hicksville and began the publication of the Hicksville Independent. The third, and present newspaper of the place, is the Review, published by W. J. Johnson. Its first number was issued in February, 1885, and it has been a welcome and weekly visitor at the homes of its patrons since that time. It is a neat 7-column folio, is ably edited and reflects credit both upon its proprietor and the citizens of the village who sustain it with their patronage.

The following report of the village council published in the Payne Review of April 2, 1891, shows the village to be in an excellent financial condition:

Conclusion.—In preparing the foregoing historical sketch of Paulding county, the writer has aimed at truth and conciseness, rather than verbosity. The task proposed in the beginning has been followed as strictly as the available data would permit. Aside from the tragical, the theme has been briefly covered. Any mention of homicides, murders, crimes, etc., has been intentionally omitted. Let such occupy a separate history, and be perused by lovers of the sensational; but let the fair pages of this be free from any dark stains or blots: spero meliora. It is unnecessary for one to assume the role of a prophet to predict for Paulding county a most brilliant future. The shadows which foretell coming events are plainly cast. Oil, gas, macadamized roads, beautiful farms, thriving villages and happy homes, all loom up in the hazy distance. The work begun by the hardy pioneer is just beginning to assume the form of the actively progressive. Paulding in its crude state, and Paulding developed, will be vastly different. The dense forests, whose shades covered the hardships of the early settlers, are being swept away, and a bountiful sunlight beginning to shed its golden streams upon the abodes of prosperity. A decade hence and the county will number fifty thousand souls; its swamps will all have been drained, and its amount of cereals grown been doubled. Then, from being the butt of ridicule and jest—the smallest of the "hoop-pole district," the swampiest of the swampy—it will have taken rank among the wealthiest and most prosperous counties of the state. In contemplating upon these things it is no wonder that some unknown lover of the Muse was inspired to write as follows on the subject of Paulding county:

No fairer land on God's green earth
  Than ours can e'er be found;
Her level acres — each is worth
  Full ten of common ground.
When tickled with the plow and hoe,
  Her harvests laughing rise;
And as the seasons come and go,
  Each brings a new surprise.
No rock-capped hills, with stony frown,
  Casts shadows o'er the land.
No sterile plain or desert brown
  Extends its waste of sand;
But all her wide expanse of soil —
  Her fields and forests wide —
Give full return for honest toil
  And join to swell our pride.
No gruesome plague assails our health,
  Or frost our growing corn;
But to our coffers added wealth
  By every breeze is borne.
Our chariot is progression's car,
  Our banners are unfurled;
We say to all, both near and far,
  Paulding against the world.

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

AUGLAIZE TOWNSHIP.

Jacob Bennett.—Among the pioneer farmers of Ohio is Jacob Bennett, who was born in Union county, June 16, 1834, the son of William and Nancy (Clark) Bennett, of this state. After acquiring a limited education, Mr. Bennett, who can tell many a story of the struggles of pioneer life, started out in business for himself and has prospered in his calling. He enlisted on the 2d of May, 1864, in Company H, One Hundred and Ninety-second regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, for the 100 days' service, and was a participant in the siege of Petersburg, the Bermuda Hundred and several skirmishes. He was discharged at Camp Chase, September 10, 1864. Re-enlisting February 14, 1865, Mr. Bennett was mustered out of the army on the first of September of that year. From Winchester, Va., he returned home and located upon the place where he now resides. He is a democrat in politics and has held the office of township trustee for two years. He is now serving a second term as justice of the peace, besides ministering to the people in the minor positions. He has resided in this county since 1852, and is one of the enterprising and progressive citizens to whom Auglaize is indebted. Mr. Bennett was married June 8, 1856, to Miss Lucentia (Linnabary), of Melrose. She was born in Delaware county, Ohio, September 19, 1839, her parents being Andrew Linnabary, born in 1813, died in 1863, and Sarah (Young) Linnabary, born in 1815. They settled in Paulding county in 1849. Mrs. Bennett's father was also in the army, in Company F, Thirty-eighth Ohio, enlisted in 1862, served one year, was sent home on account of sickness, and died about two days after his return home. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have one child, James Buchan Bennett, born in Paulding county, Ohio, May 4, 1857, he was married in Nebraska, in 1877, to Miss Jennie Keezer, also of Paulding county, Ohio. They have six children: William Andrew, born April 25, 1878; Clara Lucentia, born November 10, 1879; Josephine Pearl, born May 27, 1883; James Gordon, born April 6, 1885; Jacob Budd, born January 23, 1887; Emily Pelina, born December 19, 1888, lived in the west fourteen years and now resides in Paulding county. All were born in Boone county, Nebraska. These are the grandchildren of Jacob and Lucentia Bennett. Jacob Bennett is a member of the Thomas J. May post, of Charloe, Paulding county, Ohio, No. 703, of G. A. R.

Gideon Blanchard, Sr., is one of the wealthy farmers and stock raisers in Paulding county. He was born in Canada, March 15, 1841, and remained at home until the death of his mother, which occurred when he was ten years of age. He was then taken and reared by strangers for whom he worked until, at the age of fourteen years, he labored by the month in upper Canada. After working in the pineries, he came to Defiance county, Ohio, with but $25 in his pockets. He at once started to work in the timber regions and was engaged in rafting on the Maumee river for some time. Returning to Canada, he, in company with others, made timber in Ohio for several months. Mr. Blanchard made several trips to Canada, and in 1864 purchased the farm where he now resides. He is the proprietor of 528 acres of land in this county, 160 acres in Defiance county and 2,500 acres in West Virginia, and his ability as an expert and wise agriculturist is admitted by all who know him. He and his family are members of the Catholic church, and politically he is an independent. Mr. Blanchard was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Mumper, on June 6, 1865, and the children who blessed their union are Gideon, Jr., John, Hattie, Zilla, Ezra and Eldie, deceased, January 26, 1889.

Gideon Blanchard, Jr., one of the most industrious of the young men of Auglaize township, was born in this county on April 1, 1866, the eldest son of Gideon Blanchard, before mentioned. Mr. Blanchard is a republican in politics, and a communicant of the Catholic church. On July 21, 1891, he married Miss Lulu Boff, an estimable young lady of Perrysburg, Ohio, who was born in Toledo, Lucas county, Ohio, on January 9, 1872. Mr. Blanchard is in all respects a good citizen, and has a wide circle of friends who wish him well, and is now in possession of the homestead farm.

Philiase Blanchard is a native of Canada, having been born April 23, 1848, the son of Jacob and Harrriet Blanchard, of French origin. The mother died when our subject was but three years of age, and he was reared by a friend until eleven years old. At the age of fifteen years he came to Defiance county in company with his father, who departed this life in 1877. Mr. Blanchard worked for his brother, Joseph, who resided at Hicksville, in the timber trade, and the following summer went to Toledo, where he followed the same occupation. Crossing the lake he went to Muskingum, Mich., and remained at Grand Rapids for six years, being engaged during this time in farming and saw-milling. Coming to Paulding county he purchased eighty-two acres of land, upon which are very fine improvements, the result of hard work and energy. Mr. Blanchard is a democrat, and as such has been supervisor of his district. June 5, 1876, Miss Mary E. Sieran became his wife, and their children are Mary C., Annie, Eddie, Matilda and Alien. Mrs. Blanchard is the daughter of Peter Sieran, of Emerald township, and with her husband is a member of the Catholic church.

Rev. John Bodenbender, one of the pioneer settlers of this county, located in Auglaize township in 1850. He was born in Germany, July 26, 1826, the son of Caspar and Anna Bodenbender. The mother died in her native country, and the father in 1831 came to America and located in Auglaize township, where he remained until death called him away in 1849. John Bodenbender was but seven years of age when he came to this country with his father. At the early age of eighteen years, he was wedded to Miss Hannah, the daughter of Jacob and Barbara Snyder, and the union resulted in the birth of three children: Susanna, the wife of G. McDole; Jacob and Henry (deceased). Mrs. Bodenbender died January 11, 1853, and her husband married March 1, 1854, Miss Mary E. Fryman, whose parents were Jacob and Rachel (Gallant) Fryman. Twelve children were born of the latter marriage of our subject as follows: Eliza J., wife of John Morris; Rachel, wife of Z. Garret; Margaret, now Mrs. J. Rickner; Mary E., wife of B. Warner; David; Alice S., wife of D. Wagoner; George, Evaline, wife of A. Shoemaker; Effie, James V., Myrtle S. and Ruth A. The father of the above named is an aggressive republican, and in February, 1865, enlisted in the army for one year, receiving his discharge on the 2d of June, at Camp Dennison. The education of Mr. Bodenbender was such as enabled him to preach the gospel, and in 1875 he started upon his ministry in the Disciples church, in which he is still engaged. He deserves rank as one of the representative and model citizens of his township.

George M. Breckler, one of the progressive and enterprising young farmers of Auglaize township, was born in Putnam county, Monroe township, November 11, 1857. He is the fourth son born to H. C. Breckler, one of the leading citizens of this county. Mr. Breckler received a good education from the home schools, and at early manhood began life at farming, and now owns a good farm, which under his management yields large crops. He grows fine horses and cattle, and is known as one of the representative farmers. Politically is a democrat and a member of the Catholic church.

Henry C. Breckler is a native of Ashland county, Ohio, born September 19, 1849, the son of Christopher and Magdalena (Hosfelt) Breckler, the former of Germany, born March 31, 1821, and the latter of Prussia, born September 26, 1828. Christopher Breckler came to America with his parents when he was eight years of age. They located in Stark county in 1829, and at the end of seven years moved to Ashland county on a small farm and died there. Christopher remained on the farm and married Miss Magdalena Hosfelt, and in 1853 moved to Putnam county with his wife and three children, locating on a farm of 200 acres that he purchased, and in the fall of 1858 he sold the farm and bought in Paulding county and moved there, where he remained until death called him away on April 13, 1888; his wife died on January 4, 1891. They accumulated over 800 acres of land, which they divided equally among their children. His family consisted of eleven children, viz.: Henry C., Joseph F., John C., George M., Jacob B., Mary V., Sarah E., Theresa M., Margaret C., Sylvester J., and Clara R. Breckler, and three of whom are dead, viz.: Joseph F., John C., and Mary V. Breckler. They were members of the Roman Catholic church. Henry C. Breckler began a business life at the age of twenty-one at farming; he owns eighty-nine acres in this county and eighty acres in Defiance, which are in good state of cultivation. At present he is holding the position of constable, having acted in that office for nine years. On May 14, 1878, he joined his lot in life with Miss Catherine H., the daughter of Michael and Catherine (Hassett) Lutz, of German and Irish extraction, and his family consists of six children, viz.: Leo A., Mary Agnes, Michael C., Luke, Theresa, and Catherine A. M. Breckler; two of them are dead, viz.: Luke and Theresa. Mr. Breckler is a stanch supporter of the democratic party.

Jacob B. Breckler is a native of Paulding county, Ohio, born February 3, 1859, the son of Christopher and Magdalena Breckler. He was reared upon the farm and educated in the common schools. At the age of eighteen years he began life for himself at farming, which he has followed since, and now owns 160 acres of fine land, being one of the finest farms in northwestern Ohio, which is well stocked with fine horses, cattle and sheep, in which he takes great pride. He is one of the progressive young men, a stanch democrat and is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

Jacob Brown, deceased, was a native of Pennsylvania, and was born on the 10th of December, 1826, the son of Peter and Savilla (Lance) Brown. The latter were the parents of Jonas, Jacob, Samuel, William, Delilah, the wife of John Brown, and Elizabeth, now Mrs. D. Fockler. The death of the father occurred in 1868, and that of his wife in 1871. Jacob Brown resided on the homestead farm until he was twenty-four years of age. At this time, on the 13th of April, 1851, he was united in marriage with Miss Barbara Whitmyer, of Germany. Mrs. Brown, who was the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Marquoet) Whitmyer, was born July 2, 1832. Her parents emigrated to America in that year and located in Tuscarawas county, where the mother died. The father then went to Orange county where his death occurred. Their children are Mary, the wife of George Hodger; Jacob, who died in the army; Barbara, Margaret (deceased), Catherine, Elizabeth (deceased), and Josiah. Jacob Brown died on the 3rd of July, 1887, of a complication of diseases, and in his death there was removed from the community a good man. He had followed various occupations during his lifetime, among them being threshing, blacksmithing and saw-milling. As a republican he held the position of township trustee for some time. He was the father of Cyrus, John, Elizabeth, Lewis, Collie, Emma, Lucy, Savilla (deceased), Amanda (deceased), and Josiah. The family are members of the United Brethren church, and Mrs. Brown, with the help of her son, Lewis, now operates the farm.

David L. Childs first saw the light of day on the 2nd of March, 1849, in Fairfield county, Ohio. He is the son of Samuel and Martha J. (Westenbarger) Childs, the former a native of Virginia of English extraction, and the latter of Ohio. David, the fourth child born to these parents, began life for himself at the age of twenty-one years. His education was such as enabled him to teach, and for eight consecutive years he taught the schools in Fairfield county. He removed from his native county to Auglaize township, and settled upon the farm of forty acres which he has well improved, and upon which he still resides. He married Miss Mila Avey, the daughter of Oliver and Sarah (Fisher) Avey, of German origin, on the 22nd of March, 1876, and the union resulted in the birth of three children, named Sadie J., Eva M. and Ella M. Politically Mr. Childs is a republican, having held the minor township offices. He has been a member of the I. O. O. F. for twenty-one years, always active and interested in its welfare.

Dwight D. Columbia.—One of the enterprising young men of the county is Dwight D. Columbia, who, in connection with his farming, handles fine horses. He was born in Auglaize township, Paulding county, on the 9th of July, 1866, the son of T. H. B. and Corrilla (Marcellus) Columbia. At eighteen years of age our subject was left fatherless, and he then worked on the farm for his mother until he reached his majority. At this time he began the process of clearing and improving his own land, and has at present eighty acres of fine ground. He was married on the 5th of October, 1886, to Miss Viola J. Wichner, whose parents, George and Jennie (Jumper) Wichner, were of German lineage. Mr. and Mrs. Columbia have three children: Susa E., Cora M. and Grace O.

John George Dotterer.—One of the finest improved farms in Auglaize township, consisting of 371 acres of land, is the property of John George Dotterer, a native of Germany, born April 4, 1830. His parents were Christopher and Francesca (Demel) Dotterer, who had nine children, two of whom died. The parents came to America in 1849 and in 1851 came to this county and made Emerald township their home. Here the father died in 1875, the mother having preceded her husband to the grave, dying in 1869. John G. Dotterer remained at home until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he learned the trade of a shoemaker. In 1847 he came to America and landed in New York in April of that year. He worked in this city at his trade for thirteen months and then came to this state, working at Bucyrus, Tiffin and Sandusky respectively. May 11, 1856, Mr. Dotterer was united in matrimony with Miss Catherine Rummel, the daughter of Peter and Eve Rummel, of Germany. After his marriage, our subject removed to Junction, and until 1866 worked at his trade. At this time he embarked in the general mercantile business, which in 1870 was changed to a grocery and hardware establishment. In 1889 a disastrous fire swept through his store, and the loss incurred was heavy. Mr. Dotterer is a democrat and as such has held the offices of township treasurer and trustee. He was brought up in the faith of the German Reformed church, to which organization he is a liberal contributor. Twelve children were born into the home of our subject, namely: John P. (deceased), Mary C. (deceased), William H., Mary E. Christine (deceased), Benjamin R., Jerome G., Emma R., Catherine F., Ollie A., Franklin E. and Elsie L.

W. H. Dotterer, a leading merchant of the county, is a dealer in fine groceries, tobacco, cigars and general merchandise. He was born in Auglaize township June 23, 1861, the son of J. G. Dottterer elsewhere mentioned. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-four years of age, when his marriage with Miss Addie, the daughter of S. and Gertrude C. Most, occurred on the 14th of October, 1887. One child, named Orson S., is the result of this union. Mr. Dotterer who is an aggressive democrat has been assistant postmaster for six years, the post-office being situated in his store. He is one of the progressive young citizens of the town in which he lives.

Boyd & Freede.—The firm of Boyd & Freede, dealers in real estate and native timber and manufacturers of lumber and shaved hoops, with a branch office at Ellisville, Miss., is composed of active and energetic young men whose mill plant and realty are now worth $140,000, they having begun with nothing a few years ago. They employ a large number of men and carry on an extensive business. This firm furnished the C., J. & M. railroad with nearly all of its timber and ties, and the goods turned out are first-class. Mr. Boyd, the senior member of the firm, is a native of Ohio, having been born in Hamilton county July 30, 1848, the son of Nelson and Martha J. (Mitchell) Boyd, natives respectively of Ohio and Virginia. John Boyd, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Ohio, and served in the war of 1812. Nelson Boyd, his son, was a farmer and cooper by trade, and removed to Auglaize county, Ohio, where his death occurred in 1867. In 1861 he enlisted in the three years' service, and became a member of the Seventy-first regiment. He served as lieutenant of company B, Thirty-third regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, and was in the struggle for over four years. Mrs. Boyd is still living, making her home with her son. J. A. Boyd grew to years of maturity on the farm and received a good education. At the age of sixteen years he started in life for himself, and as his father had died, a large share of the support of the family fell to him. He began teaching, and for seven consecutive years taught in the common schools. In the spring of 1874 he came to Paulding, and located at Change Bridge, where he engaged in merchandising and dealing in native timber. He continued thus until 1887, when he turned his whole attention to his present business, and is to-day one of the prominent and well-to-do men of Paulding county. Mr. Boyd is a democrat in politics, and has held the minor township offices, and has served as postmaster of Melrose, Charloe and Pleasant Point for fifteen years. He is a member of the I. O. O. The family are members of the Disciples church, and are popular with all who know them.

A. Brown.—Among the prominent and leading merchants of Melrose, A. Brown holds a conspicuous place. He established himself in business in 1882, and does an immense trade, amounting to $10,000 and $1,2000 annually. He carries a full stock of dry goods, groceries and notions, and in all his dealings with the public is honest and upright. Mr. Brown was born in Fayette county, Penn., September 1, 1829, and was the youngest of four sons and six daughters, born to William and Mary (Bernhart) Brown, natives of Ireland and Connecticut respectively. The paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch was William Brown, who emigrated to America in 1796, and, with his family, located in Pennsylvania. William Brown, his son, and the father of our subject, was but six years of age at that time, and received but a limited education in the schools of that day. He learned milling, and married Miss Bernhart early in life. He served in the war of 1812, removed to Richland county in 1837, and then came to Crawford county, where he purchased timber land and entered the hard life of the pioneer. He improved his farm and engaged in milling for a time. In 1853 Mr. Brown removed to Williams county, and, abandoning milling, turned his whole attention to farming. He died at the age of seventy-one years, his wife having preceded him to the grave. Our subject and his brother, Nicholas Brown of Williams county, are the only surviving members of the large family reared by Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Mr. A. Brown was reared in Crawford county, and when but thirteen years of age began life for himself, by working as a farm hand. He attended school through the winter sessions, and at the age of eighteen years began learning the carpenter's trade. At this he worked for nine years with good success. He was married in 1852, on the 29th of January, to Miss Sarah, the daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Seiler) Reed, and their children are: Anna E., wife of Theodore Burt; Catherine E., wife of T. E. Switzer, and Frances. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are worthy members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1856 they removed to Paulding county, and in the spring of 1857 located near old Fort Brown. Here Mr. Brown rented a mill, and it was the first grist mill to be run by water power in the county. It was built by Jacob Switzer, who afterward sold it to Mr. Reed, and later it came into the possession of Mr. Brown. In 1884, Mr. Brown sold this mill, but in time it again came into his hands, and is now owned by him, although for the last five years it has been idle. Mr. Brown started in life empty-handed, but is now the possessor of one hundred and fifty acres of good land, in Brown township; besides fifteen acres in Putnam county. He also owns a good village property in Melrose, and his stock of goods is valued at $5,000. Mr. Brown is a republican, and for one term served efficiently as county commissioner. He has been treasurer of Brown township for six years. In February, 1865, Mr. Brown enlisted in company B, One Hundred and Ninety-second regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, and was assigned to the army of the Potomac. His service was mostly in the Shenandoah valley, and his discharge was received in September, 1865. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Melrose, and is one of the esteemed and influential citizens of the township in which he lives.

Everett A. Budd—The Budd family in America owes its origin to three English sea captains, Henry, John and William Budd, who, tiring of old Neptune's stormy billows, settled on Long Island, N. Y., about the year of 1700, and took up the less perilous vocation of tilling the soil. From Long Island portions of the family passed into New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Virginia, where traces of them yet exist. They were mostly farmers, but some of them attained local eminence in both law and medicine. Dr. John Budd, of the Pennsylvania branch, emigrated to Delaware county, Ohio, about the year of 1810, and soon after married Miss Mary Adams, a lineal descendant of the Adams family of Massachusetts. His third son, Eli Budd, is the father of the subject of this sketch. He was born in Delaware county, Ohio, August 19, 1820, and married March 30, 1841, Miss Mary A. Clarke, who was born in Luzerne county, Penn., March 30, 1821, and removed to Ohio when a babe. She was educated at Central college, Ohio, and spent some years in teaching school in Delaware and Franklin counties, Ohio, receiving her first certificate from Judge Swan in Columbus. The fruits of this union are as follows: Everett A., born in Harlem, Delaware county, Ohio, March 4, 1842; Mary C., born December 21, 1843, married Capt. Joseph Ice, in the fall of 1863, and died April 12, 1864; Remembrance L., born in Columbus, Ohio, February 13, 1846, married J. C. Randolph in 1867; John C., born January 27, 1848, and is now a resident of Defiance, Ohio; Lucretia Ellen, born November 4, 1853, married to Henry Varner September 6, 1870; James E., born February 17, 1856, married in January, 1891, to Miss Catharine Motter; and Judge W., born July 22, 1860, and died in Walkerton, Ind., February 12, 1882, from injuries received by a train of cars upon which he was employed as a brakeman. Eli Budd and family removed to Paulding county in 1850, and settled in the woods upon land which he entered from the government. After sharing all the hardships of a pioneer life and clearing up a large farm he died on the 6th of July 1867, honored and respected by all who knew him. His widow is still living and resides with her daughter, Mrs R. L. Randolph. Everett A., was married April 24, 1862, to Miss Marie Lindsly, but owing to marital infelicity a separation and divorce soon followed. He was a teacher for several years, and served for a time as orderly sergeant of company H, One hundred and Thirty-second, Ohio volunteer infantry. The latter years of his life have been turned to journalism, and he has filled the editorial chair on several county papers; also been a contributor to several city periodicals. He is the author of the following poem, "Only a Brakeman," which was first published in the Steuben county, Ind., Republican, and afterward went the round of the press in the United States:

Only a brakeman! killed by the train!
Only a brakeman! by accident slain;
Onward, rush onward, no time for delay;
Blow the shrill whistle and hasten away.

Only a brakeman! cries the wild throng,
Only a brakeman! been called by death's gong;
Why should the eye glisten? why should the heart ache?
'Tis only a brakeman who's set his last brake.

Only a brakeman! is flashed through the air;
Only a brakeman! for his body prepare:
On the morrow 'tis shipped as poor common freight,—
As only a brakeman who has gone to his fate.

Only a brakeman! the editors write:
Only a brakeman! 'twas late in the night,
He was doing his duty — the train broke in two,
When down to his death the brakeman fell through.

Only a brakeman! but the pride of some heart;
Only a brakeman! but in some busy mart
Are eyes that are weeping, and homes that are hushed,
Because a poor brakeman was yesterday crushed.

Only a brakeman! but a true hearted boy;
Only a brakeman! but some mother's joy;
For whom there's no muffle for the coarse iron wheel,
That grinds on her heart as on the grooved steel.

Dr. H. S. Burson, a native of Mt. Blanchard, Hancock county, Ohio, was born November 19, 1840. His father, A. F. Burson, was one of the pioneer physicians of that section of the state and settled in Hancock county, in 1834. He was born in Loudoun county, Va., in 1812, and was reared in his native state until seventeen years of age, when his parents, who were Quakers, located in Columbiana county, Ohio. Being of a studious nature, young Burson obtained a good education. He read medicine with Dr. McCook, of New Lisbon, and attended the medical schools at Cincinnati, graduating with high honors. He began the practice of his profession when he was twenty-two years of age, and by degrees built up a large and lucrative business in his calling. He continued to practice until 1860, when he retired, and is now enjoying the evening of life, surrounded by his family and hosts of friends. Dr. Burson was married to Miss Rebecca Cumberland, of East Palestine, Ohio, and seven children, two of whom died, were born to them. In his youth the doctor was a whig, but is now an active democrat. Dr. H. S. Burson was the second son born to Dr. A. F. and Rebecca Burson, and his preliminary education was obtained in the common schools. When eighteen years of age he entered Miami university, entering the junior class. He attended this institution one year, and upon the breaking out of the war enlisted in company A, Twenty-first Ohio volunteer infantry, for three months' service. He was assigned to the army of Ohio and was stationed at Gallipolis during the greater part of his time, acting as clerk of the first division of the army of Kentucky. After the war Dr. Burson located at Winamac, Ind., where he taught for six months, removing at the expiration of his school term to Chicago, where he was employed as a clerk in the office of Baud & Adams, attorneys. He was an able clerk and received a salary of $1,000 per year. In 1866 Dr. Burson went to Washington, D. C., as private secretary of Congressman Norman B. Judd, and one year later was appointed to a clerkship in the treasury department, serving until the administration of U. S. Grant. He then, following the injunction of Horace Greeley, "went west" and located at Lebanon, Mo., accepting a situation as teacher in the common schools. After six months spent at that place, Mr. Burson returned home and began the study of medicine in the office of his father. In 1874 he attended the Ann Arbor medical college, and also the Eclectic medical institute at Cincinnati, graduating from the last named in the spring of 1875. The following July Dr. Burson located at Oakwood and entered upon the practice of his profession, holding at the present time the place of the oldest resident physician of the town. He is a surgeon of ability and a successful practitioner, whose long years of experience have earned him an enviable reputation in the medical field. While a resident of Washington, the doctor had the fortune to be admitted to the senate chamber during the impeachment of Andrew Johnson. He is an ardent democrat, having affiliated with that party since his youth. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. August 2, 1881, Dr. Burson was happily wedded to Miss Sarah E., the daughter of John and Susan Harmon, early settlers of Paulding county. Four children have blessed them, named: Jessie R., Aaron F., Georgie M. and Harrison S.

John J. Burt.—Prominent among the leading farmers of Brown township is John J. Burt, a native of the "Buckeye" state. He was born in Morrow county, August 1, 1849, the son of Lot and Abigail E. (Brown) Burt, of German and Irish extraction. His early life was passed upon the farm in Brown township, and his education was obtained in the neighboring schools. He was married September 2, 1867, to Christina Fisher, daughter of Samuel and Julien (French) Fisher, of German and English origin. Two children blessed this union, named Aden and Alfretta. On the 2d of March, 1864, Mr. Burt enlisted in company C, One Hundred and Ninety-first Ohio volunteer infantry, for one year, and received his discharge at Camp Chase, August 28, 1865. Returning home he engaged in farming and operating a saw mill, in connection with which he is now interested in the raising of fine sheep. Mr. Burt is a stanch republican, and held the office of township clerk for twenty-seven years, which fact demonstrates the popularity and esteem in which he is held, and the ability with which he discharged his official duties.

Mark M. Burt, a leading citizen of Brown township, was born in Washington county, Penn., December 29, 1822, the son of Ebenezer and Sarah (Leonard) Burt, of Scotch lineage. He was the third in order of birth of ten children born to these parents, and received but a common education. He married Miss Elizabeth, the daughter of Reuben and Esther (McCleary) Emmick, of German origin, on the 7th of May, 1849. Their children are named Bethnel, Silas (deceased), Hiram, Theodore, Samantha (deceased), Melissa, wife of Frank Myers; Leah, wife of Richard Bates; Isaac (deceased), and Frank E. (deceased). He was in the company which built the fortifications at Petersburg and Richmond, and was at White House landing. Returning home in 1864, he began farming. He had not many advantages for obtaining an education, though he worked hard for what he did receive. In 1861 he located in Paulding county, upon the land where he now resides, which is pleasantly located in Brown township. Mr. Burt signed the first ditch petition, and has been prominently identified with the improvements made in Brown township. His success in life has been due to his energy and hard work, and he is an expert and progressive agriculturist.

C. T. Carey, editor and proprietor of the Oakwood Sentinel, was born in Brown township, Paulding county, August 21, 1855, and is the son of Judge D. C. Carey. His early life was spent upon the farm assisting at general farm labor. He attended the district school until fourteen years of age when he entered college at Ft. Wayne. He subsequently learned the printer's trade, and for several years worked at journeyman work. He, in February, 1889, established the Oakwood Sentinel, which is a credit to the town and its proprietor, as it is a well edited newspaper. Mr. Carey was married January 1, 1877, to Miss Victoria McCreary, who is a native of the county and was born November 4, 1858. They have three children living, viz.: Edward E., Carl and Benjamin H.

Hon. David C. Carey is a worthy descendant of one of Paulding county's pioneer settlers. He was born in Auglaize township of the above named county, January 21, 1826, and is a son of Isaac and Abigail (Hudson) Carey. George Carey, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Essex county, N. J., and of English extraction. The Carey family were among the early settlers of Essex county, and date their settlement in this country back to the colonial period, being one of the prominent families of that day. The maternal grandfather was Shadrach Hudson, a native of New York state and a descendant of an English family. He served gallantly in the war of 1812, and subsequently settled in Miami county, Ohio, being one of the early residents of that section. In 1821 or 1822 he removed to Paulding county, and it is claimed that he erected the first dwelling in the county. He was a teamster in the war of 1812 and was at the battle which resulted in the defeat of St. Clair. He was a man of medium stature and possessed intelligence as was rarely found in the men of that day. His family consisted of six sons and four daughters, the last one dying in Defiance, in 1890, at the age of seventy years. Isaac Carey, the father of our subject, removed, with his parents, to Kentucky, when he was five years old, and afterward located with them in Miami county, Ohio. He enjoyed but few educational advantages, being raised upon the farm, and engaged in learning the trade of the stone mason and brick-layer. In 1823 Mr. Carey decided to locate in Paulding county, and, in company with his wife and son, Shadrach H., he traveled overland to Paulding county, and settled in the wilderness. Isaac Carey was a hardworking man, and devoted the better part of his life to his trade and in making a home for his family. He was an advocate of education, and sent his children to the schools of the neighborhood, which he and two neighbors established in a private way. He raised a family of five sons and four daughters, the subject of this sketch being the only living member of the family. Mr. Carey was a consistent and life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal church. After a life of usefulness and probity, he died at the age of fifty-one years, bearing with him to the grave the esteem and love of all whose fortune it had been to know him. David C. Carey was the first white child born in what is now Paulding county. He was raised upon the homestead farm in Auglaize township, and was given an education such as could be obtained in the township schools. He also attended school at Defiance. Remaining at home he worked upon the farm and later taught school. After his marriage he located on section 20 of Brown township, and commenced the process of clearing and improving a farm, where he continued to live until 1870, when he was elected probate judge and served till 1875, having been re-elected after the expiration of his first term. In 1877, Mr. Carey removed to Hutchinson, Kan., and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1878 he returned to Brown township and located upon the homestead farm, where he resided until 1882, when he settled in Oakwood, where he has since lived. Mr. Carey has always been an active and ardent republican, and acceptably filled the office of mayor of Oakwood. He enlisted during the late war in Company

H, One Hundred and Ninety-first Ohio volunteer infantry, on February 20, 1865, and saw active service until August 27th. While going to the Ohio river and into the Shenandoah valley, he contracted a cold from the effects of which he has never fully recovered. Mr. Carey was married May 22, 1848, to Miss Sarah Lydia, the accomplished daughter of Josiah and Lydia (Goodell) Talbert. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Carey was William Goodell, a native of Massachusetts and a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He was a descendant of a Puritan family. Josiah Talbert, the father of Mrs. Carey, settled in western New York in 1815, where he and his wife died, leaving a son and two daughters, Mrs. Carey being the only living member of her family. She came to Defiance in 1836 with her sister, Mrs. Allen, wife of Dr. O. H. Allen, and received a liberal education in the schools of that place, completing her course in Oberlin college. This cultured lady became the mother of ten children, whose respective names are as follows: Sarah A. (deceased); Annie, wife of C. B. May; Harriet (deceased), who married J. L. Shively; Clark T., publisher of the Oakwood Sentinel; Lucy C., wife of Levi C. Keck; William E. (deceased); Alice and Mary, who died in infancy, and Mary L., the wife of L. J. Cristy. Mr. and Mrs. Carey are both consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, the former having become a member at the age of thirteen years. He has lived an exemplary and temperate life, never having indulged in the use of liquors and tobacco. He enjoys the confidence and respect of the people of Paulding county, and is a man of much prominence in the community. Mrs. Carey is known among the people of Brown township and Oakwood as a true Christian woman, and in the hour of sickness and trouble it is she who administers to the afflicted in her quiet and unostentatious manner, doing deeds of kindness and charity.

And whoredoms are an abomination before me, saith the Lord of hosts."—Jacob 2: 6-9. The confession of faith of the church is here appended: "We believe in God the Eternal father, and in his son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression. We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. We believe that a man must be called of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority, to entitle him to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof. We believe in the same kind of organization that existed in the primitive church, viz.: Apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc. We believe that in the bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly. We believe that the canon of scripture is not full, but that God, by His spirit, will continue to reveal His word to man. We believe in the powers and gifts of the everlasting gospel, viz.: The gift of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, healing, visions, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, wisdom, charity brotherly love, etc. We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression. We believe that in all matters of controversy upon the duty of man toward God and in reference to preparation and fitness for the world to come, the word of God should be decisive and the end of dispute, and that when God directs, man should obey. We believe in the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, county and state, and consequently better fitted for the change which cometh at death. We believe that men should worship God in 'spirit and in truth;' and that such worship does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land." He is the youngest of six children, four sons and two daughters, born to William and Hannah (Martin) Chester, both natives of England. The father, who was a wagon-maker by trade, was apprenticed when young at wheelwrighting and the carpenter's trade. As he had received but a limited education he started in life a young boy with nothing but his profession. He was small of stature, but strong and hardy, and the active life he began in boyhood was followed throughout in the county of Northamptonshire, where he died in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He married while young, and his wife, a member of good standing in the Episcopal church, preceded him to the grave. They reared five children (two of whom still survive) to manhood and womanhood, and named them William (deceased), John (deceased), Sarah, now Mrs. George Hutchins; Jane (deceased), and Thomas. Thomas Chester grew to manhood in his native county, receiving a limited education, his training prior to nine years of age having been received in the Sabbath school. He began working out as a farm hand, one and two years at a time, and later labored for ten years at £9 annually and his board. His wages increasing, he remained as a farmhand until after his marriage, which took place in October, 1850, when Miss Elizabeth Hale became his wife. He and his brother landed in New York in April, 1851, thence went to Cleveland, Ohio, locating in Lorain county, where they soon found work on a farm. Thomas Chester concluded that he could make a good living in this country, so he sent for his wife and daughter, Jane, who was born on July 9, 1851, and they, accompanied by his sister, Sarah, now Mrs. Hutchins, arrived in October, the same year. They resided with their employer's family for nearly twelve months, when, with his limited means, Mr. Chester removed his family to Paulding county in November, 1852, and in January of the next year he and his brother entered forty acres of land on which he now lives. They erected the rude cabin familiar to all pioneers, and experienced the hardships belonging to the people who, in years gone by, worked so hard to make a home for those dear to them. They toiled early and late in clearing the farm, and the roads of the vicinity were, with the help of others, made by them. Working together for eight years they made fair improvements, and purchased eighty more acres adjoining their first land. At the end of this time they divided equally with one another. Mr. Chester has continued to reside here ever since, and at the present time has a farm well improved, which contains 460 acres of land. Y. At the age of three years Mr. Potter lost his mother, and upon her death his father returned to his native land, binding out our subject to a man by the name of Morris, until he became of age. At the age of thirteen Mr. Potter ran away and went to sea, which he followed until 1847, when he joined the American army and served through the Mexican war, receiving a gunshot wound in the bowels, while guarding an army train with his company. At the close of the war Mr. Potter settled in Jay county, Ind., and engaged in farming and mercantile business. He subsequently concluded to change locations and selected Morrow county, Ohio, and engaged in the same business. While a resident of that county he was elected to the office of justice of the peace, which he filled for nine years, and while still in that county he commenced reading law under H. S. Profeth, in connection with his other business ventures, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. In 1868 he again changed his location, at this time coming to Paulding. After serving his time, in 1874 he and his father established the Paulding Democrat, which our subject conducted for two years. In 1876 he engaged in the real estate and insurance business under the firm name of Parr & Potter. Mr. Parr subsequently retired and the firm became Potter & Durfey. Mr. Potter subsequently purchased Mr. Durfey's interest and conducted the business until 1881. He then entered his father's bank as bookkeeper, which position he filled until 1887, when he became its cashier, which position he has since filled. Our subject is also extensively engaged in farming. He was married in 1881 to Miss Alma R., daughter of Solomon Miller, of Paulding, and by this marriage they are the parents of five children: George W., Kenneth B., Wesley N., Glenn S., and Muriel R. In the fall of 1857 he was placed in nomination on the democratic ticket for sheriff of the county, and was elected by a good majority. He served the people faithfully. Mr. Richards was quite a hunter during his early life, having killed bear, deer and other game. In April, 1861, he enlisted in company G, Fourteenth Ohio volunteer infantry, three months' service, and served until discharged. In the fall of 1861, Mr. Richards was elected to fill the office of county treasurer, in which position he served for four years. No man stands higher in the community than Mr. Richards.

Here he remained for four years, gaining a knowledge of men and events which was to be so essential in his business life. He then engaged as a clerk in the dry goods store of Mr. Cullen, his present partner, remaining in the emply of that gentleman for over a year. In April, 1888, in company with his former employer, he purchased the insurance business of George F. McCabe and the firm of Cullen & Richards was established. In the spring of 1891, Mr. E. M. At the age of twenty-six years, he married Miss Mary Sherer, who came to the county in childhood, and has been a resident since. They are prosperous, well-to do people, and enjoy a substantial home near Mendon, Ohio. Our subject, Joseph R., was reared upon the farm, where a good opportunity was afforded for plenty of hard work and a country school education. He was studiously inclined, and had a strong disposition to excel, as well as a retentive memory, thus standing at the head of his classes. Taking to books kindly, his leisure hours upon the farm were spent in reading, from which he profited later on. At the age of eighteen he held a teacher's license, but instead of teaching he began an apprenticeship in the office of the Mercer county Observer, during which time he pursued a course of study under the direction of Rev. J. M. Anderson, who took 75 a great interest in him, then, as his own preceptor, he has become well versed and is a fair example of what pluck, and a determination to succeed will accomplish. In 1884, he became a partner in the office, which co-partnership existed until the fall of 1889, when he sold his interest, and December 1, 1889, he purchased the Paulding county Republican, which under his management and editorial skill now ranks second to none, being a clean, well-edited county paper and party organ. Her husband, Peter Lewis, was a hatter by trade, and in 1816 he liberated his slaves, sold his home and removed to Chillicothe, Ohio, where he purchased 640 acres of partly cleared land. Here his family sickened, and becoming disheartened, they returned east to Columbia where the mother died, leaving four small children. Soon after the only daughter died, and Mr. Lewis removed to Greensburgh, Penn., and here married. His children were bound out, our subject being taken by a farmer who could not teach him a trade. So at the age of fifteen years he was taken to Pittsburg, where he was bound out to Mr. F. C. Davis and began learning the art of making chairs and ornamenting. He remained here three years and then worked as a journeyman some time for his board and washing. He painted the first canal boat which floated down the Erie canal and also the first passenger car which crossed the mountains. He also painted the first canal boat which plied on the Wabash canal, and was owned by Mr. Frank Reinische, and the first boat built at Antwerp, of which George McCormick was the proprietor. On arriving in Paulding county Mr. Lewis found his land covered with woods, but setting to work, he soon had a portion of it cleared and then erected a house. He lived here and then bought eighty acres just north of the town, which is still his home. Just before the railroad was built, Mr. Lewis located at Latty, in which place he laid out seventy acres and made for himself a good investment. He has been in poor health for some time and his eyes are weak. He was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, July 10, 1823, the son of Frederick and Ellen (Scorkins) Shafer, of English and German parentage. Mr. Shafer received a common education and was married in Allen county, on the 29th of September, 1842, to Miss Susan Dickey. She was born in Holmes county September 4, 1818, and was the daughter of John and Mary (Deets) Dickey. The children which bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Shafer are: Jacob D., John F., William, Daniel A., Jefferson E. and Willomina, Mary E. and Susan A., who are deceased. Mr. Shafer is one of the leading republicans of Washington township and cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren. He is one of the pioneer settlers of the county and highly respected for the long life of probity and usefulness which he has led.

Jacob D. Shafer is the son of John Shafer, who is elsewhere mentioned in this volume. He was born on the 22d of February, 1844, in Allen county, Ohio, and at the age of four years came to Paulding county, with his parents, where he grew to manhood on one of the first farms in Washington township, following the occupation of the farmer. He was married in Putnam county, September 6, 1866, to Miss Susan, the daughter of David and Esther (Shank) Spitnale, and by her he had the following named children: John W., Hulda E., wife of Elias Bidlack; Elizabeth, Annie, David, Lewis, Lawson, Eula and Clinton J. Mrs. Shafer was born in September, 1846, and, with her husband, belongs to the Mennonite church. Mr. Shafer has held many of the township offices, and is a republican in politics. He has been a worthy citizen of Paulding county since 1868. On the 15th of June, 1863, he enlisted in company C, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Ohio volunteer infantry, and received his discharge at Cleveland, Ohio, March 4, 1864. He took part in the battles of Cumberland Gap and Clinch river, during which engagements he fought bravely and faithfully for his country.

Isaac Staley, a retired farmer, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, January 7, 1829, the son of John and Arah (Kerby) Staley, natives of Virginia and Maryland, respectively, the former of German and the latter of Irish and English extraction. They came to Pickaway county, Ohio, in childhood and here married, rearing a family of three sons and three daughters. Mr. Staley died at the age of seventy years, and Mrs. Staley yet survives, aged eighty-three years. Our subject removed to Allen county, in infancy, with his parents, and was frequently nursed by the Indians, as they were numerous in that section during his childhood. He was reared a farmer boy and received a limited education from the common schools, and during his boyhood days took up blacksmithing in the shop with his father. He began business at Lafayette, Ohio, where he opened a blacksmith, wagon and repair shop. Mr. Staley was an expert workman, and made many a breaking plow and other farm tools. In the fall of 1863, he removed to Paulding county, locating in section 18, Washington township, having to cut his road to his forest home, where he became a pioneer. He opened a blacksmith shop in which he worked during the day, and at night cleared away the forest where he had his first wheat field. He followed his trade for thirty years along with farming, becoming one of the well-to-do farmers of his county. After abandoning his trade he began dealing in timber, after which he was employed by Moses Bros., of Cleveland, Ohio, and for several years was one of the most active timber dealers in northwestern Ohio, and no man stands higher for integrity and honor. He is an aggressive republican and one of the leaders of his party for years. He located at Dupont, Ohio, in 1890, where he enjoys all the comforts of life provided by his own hard work and industry. Mr. Staley is one of the leading Sunday-school workers in the county, and during the first two years in this county, succeeded in establishing five Sunday-schools, and to-day fine church societies flourish as the fruits of his work. He is also a pioneer temperance worker. Mr. Staley was married, in 1840, to Miss Martha A. Gilbert, a native of Canada, of English parentage. By this union are eight children, viz.: Clinton J., Caroline, wife of Edward Keltner; Mary, wife of Mayland Thompson; Lilly, wife of James Sherer; Isaac L., Edward, sheriff of Paulding county, William and Arthur H. Mrs. Staley died in 1879, having been a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Staley married again in the fall of 1882. Mrs. Margaret Kingery became the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Staley are worthy members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Staley has been a member for forty years.
