most early Pulaski County water-powered mills were combinations of grist and saw mills. Grist mills required the most flour and so there were many establishments in late years where sawing lumber was the sole operation. There also were several side lines of business in connection with these earliest grain mills, which was in great demand, and others raised the kind of corn that would produce the most whiskey. Whiskey and moonshine would better fare and drink for whiskey as the mill established a ten yard to serve the town into better. He also ran a distillery to convert some of his grain into that commodity. To increase distillery with a lot product, he had a log lot where he gathered logs on the mill.

A slaughter house converted the logs into beef and pork and a packing house preserved them.
